Nebraska, California, Kansas, and The B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The starting Points of this Route are at Chicago and Peoria. The central point is BURLINGTON, on the Mississippi. It traverses Illinois and the whole breadth of Southern Iowa. Near the Missouri, its trunk forks into three branches, for it has three western termini.

The northern terminus is Council Bluffs, where crossing the [illegible] it connects with the Union Pacific for all places on the intra continental and Pacific slopes. Over-land travel and traffic choose this reliable route more and more.

Its next terminus is Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, fifty-five miles west of the Missouri at Plattsmouth. This is the only direct avenue to the South Platte country, where the sales of railroad land last season, rose to half a million.

Its third terminus is at Hamburg, and Nebraska City. At Hamburg it makes close connections, twice a day, for St. Joseph, Leavenworth, Kansas City, and the whole South-west.

In journeying then, from the East to Kansas, via Burlington, you enjoy advantages you can secure on no other line. You both pass over a road second to none in speed, safety, or any [illegible] luxury of modern travel; and while on your way survey the garden of Illinois and Missouri, as well as 400,000 acres of prairie in South-western Iowa now in market at low prices and long credit.

Keep it then, before the people bound westward, to "take the Burlington Route."

Best A. Coffee Sugar, 8pounds for one dollar, at T. B. Totten's.

The Bower Dance was the attraction in this place on the Fourth. Quite a large party of young folks were in attendance.

A few subscribers are rolling in every week and it will be but a short time until the Courier goes into the home of every family in the county. Why shouldn't it?

Go to T. B. Totten's and get 8pounds of best Coffee A. Sugar, for one dollar.

Visiting cards of pale lavender color are the style now. As to size, taste differ, only it is agreed that they shouldn't be any larger than an ordinary newspaper.

Don't believe every report you hear. If a man passes in community for a nice man remember he may be a knave. If he runs down the other men a great deal, watch him. If he prates about their sins, you may bet he has some of his own.

You can buy, at the popular Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block, Ft. Wayne, Ind., good all wool casimere suits for ten dollars, better ones $15, and the best for $18. Call and see them.

Who Help a Town.—Enterprising business men help a town by liberal advertising. They create a demand for goods that would never be thought of, and draw custom that would go somewhere else.

An Indianapolis man has got a nose which he can put out of joint and swing it around on the side of his face like a gate. He don't do anything for a living but fall down on dilapidated sidewalks and sue the city for breaking his nose, and when he gets his money he straightens his nose up and sets it for another locality.—Some say he is a fraud.

We are selling at the Red Front, good Linen coats at 90c, and the very best for 150, overalls 50c a pair, good paper collars, with linen button holes, for 10c per box.

Who was it that said croquet was an innocent amusement? Two little boys were playing at it at Moline, Ill., when they got into a little argument, and one of the mallets went off, though neither of them knew it was loaded, and smashed in the top of the head of the one that was under the place where it lit. They buried him at eventide.

It has been at last definitely ascertained, from the census returns at Washington that the total population of the United States is 38,545,153, of which only 442,500 in the Territores.

If you want 8 pounds of the best Coffee A. Sugar, for one dollar, go to T. B. Totten's.

Die Modenwelt.—An illustrated magazine of Fashions and Fancy work. We have received the June number of the above named magazine and would recommend it to every lady who wishes to keep up with the fashions. In everything that renders a magazine attractive it is certainly superior to any fashion magazine we have seen. $3 per annum. Address S. T. Taylor, Importer of the Ladies' Fashions, 391 Canal Street, New York.

Fine black suits can be bought at the Red Front Clothing House from $12 to $14 all finer goods in proportion. Remember the place go see and be convinced before you buy.

Potato-bugs KuKluxed a juvenile African in Southern Indiana the other day. The district is to be put under martial law.

T. B. Totten is selling the best Coffee A. Sugar, 8 pounds for one dollar.

A Fort Wayne club has purchased a shell boat so light and evenly balanced that "the rowers are compelled to part their hair in the middle" to avoid upsetting.

All the clothing men are crying clothing is going up since the advance in war, but the popular Red Front Clothing House are selling goods cheaper than ever. We purchased our winter goods in May when they were very low, and will give our customers the advantage. Come and see us at No. 5 Keystone Block, Fort Wayne.

Do you know that there is a man in our place so forgetful of faces that his wife is compelled to keep a wafer stuck on the end of her nose that he may distinguish her from other ladies? But this does not prevent him from making occasional mistakes Yesterday, for instance, meeting a woman with a rather red nose, he insisted upon hugging her a little, supposing her to be his wife. He discovered his mistake when the woman knocked him down with a fire shovel.

A ride of a few miles beyond the town limits, in almost any direction, discloses the fact that our farmers have become largely infected with the spirit of improvement, and are not disposed to remain behind in building enterprises. New residences, barns, stables, and other out-houses, all of the best class, have been erected in such numbers, that we find it impossible to specify or particularize them. We are pleased to note, in a general way, this evidence of prosperity among our farming people, which is mostly due to their excellent thrift and management.

Those highly virtuous individuals who sent money to the New York 'Sawdust' swindlers in the hope of receiving a return of counterfeit bills are likely to come to grief. Their letters are to be retained and opened at the New York post office, and the name of the writer forwarded to the postmaster where written, with instructions to post it conspicously in the office with a statement of the facts. The idea is a good one, and if carried out some rich developments may be expected. The man who is mean enough to buy counterfeit money with the intention of passing it upon unsuspecting neighbors, is mean enough to steal his neigbor's sheep if he thought he would not get found out, and it is right that the public should be informed of his intention.

I would respectfully announce to the citizens of Auburn and vicinity, that I have found from past experience that I cannot run business profitably to customers or to myself, and do a credit business. Therefore I shall hearafter sell exclusively for cash, or ready pay.

Those knowing themselves indebted to me will confer a great favor by calling and settling their accounts as soon as possible —and will be glad to sell you all the goods you may want, at as low prices, as can be offered for cash.

T. B. Totten.

The First in the County.—Our enterprising friend, Joe Rainier, of the Rainier House, has just recived, a very fine omnibus, of the best make, which is to run to the depot for all trains, instead of the hack as heretofore. This is taking hold of things with the right spirit and we hope to see more improvements of this kind rapidly come in through the energy and perseverance of every business and professional man in the place. Additions and improvements like this have their influence, and strike every visitor favorably, so that the more we have the more favorable impressions are received, which often influence strangers to cast their lot amongst us, and thus increase the importance and influence of our town.

Potato Bugs.—These infestuous, tempestiuous diabolical, invaders of Fenian rights—these fat bellied, striped, cadaverous potato bugs, can be killed by filling them two thirds full of gunpowder and laying them bottom side up on a tin roof with the sun whooping it up to the tune of 99° in the shade. The caloric fixes the tin roof—the tin roof ignites the gunpowder—the gunpowder explodes the potato bug and he becomes with his stars and stripes like a thing that was. Patent applied for.

A First-class Hotel.—In these days of cosmopolitanism, a good hotel is to the hungry and tired traveler, what an oasis of the desert is to the thirsty caravaneer —a luxury which home only can excel.—A good hotel therefore is a blessing to the public, and an establishment which will do more to enhance the reputation of a city or town than anything else. Auburn certainly has such a hotel in the Weaver House, S. C. Swineford, proprietor. The manner in which it is conducted, the convenient arrangement of its rooms, and above all, the abundance of savory dishes which cover its table, are only surpassed by the geniality of the host who presides over it all. To stop at this house is a treat of which every traveler avails himself, and of which the agent of the Gazette has lately taken advantage, very much to his edification. In a private letter he speaks of its management in the highest terms. We congratulate the Auburnites in having such a hotel. It does honor to their town.—Ft. Wayne Gazette.

We would add to the above that the merits of this establishment rest not alone with the popular landlord, but must be accredited, to large extent to the excellent landlady whose supervision of everything insures that cleanly and tidy appearance which has made this house so popular.

Broke Jail—Escape of a Notorious Thief—Sheriff Plum Murderously Attacked and Nearly Killed.

On last Sabbath evening, while most of our citizens were engaged in devotional exercises at the various churches, a desperate scene was being enacted at our county jail. A notorious horse thief known under the name of B. Michigan, who has been confined in jail for the past three months, for stealing a horse near Spencerville, called to Sheriff Plum, who was the only person on the premises at the time, to bring him a drink of water.—The prisoner had conducted himself all along in a submissive manner, was allowed the previlege of having the freedom of the jail. The Sheriff in complying opened the door of the cell, when the prisoner rushed upon with a billet of wood, inflicting frightful gashes upon his head. The Sheriff, though stunned and bleeding closed with the villain, and would have overpowered him had not his thumb been broken in the struggle. The prisoner made for the door with the Sheriff in close pursuit shouting murder, but the fellow leaped the fence and by the time assistance came he was lost to sight in the woods, close by. Drs. Cassbeer and Cowan with a number of others arrived, and found Mr. Plum some distance from the house in a terrible condition. He was speedily cared for, his wounds dressed and is now in fair way for recovery provided nothing of a more serious character allies itself with his injuries. Havey Nichols started in pursuit the next morning, but no trace has been found of the fugitive.

We wonder now that our people did not turn out in a body and endeavor to arrest the criminal that evening

One hundred dollars is now offered for the apprehension of "Michigan." He is 5 feet 8 inches high; rather heavy set; wighs about 170; dark hair, rather grey; grey eyes, the left smaller than the right; one heel injured and smaller than the right; and wore a dark brown suit.—No Whiskers. It is sincerely hoped that he will be captured. We will warrant that he will not get away from the Sheriff a second time.

Modern Literature.—Twas at the close of a beautiful afternoon one morning in December, that three predestrians might be going up hill or horseback, in a three wheeled carriage. The youngest of these three gentleman was an old lady about 14, whose jet white locks was combed back from her ample forehead, and hung in luxurious profusion from the overhanging boughs of water lily that stood upon the steps of a marble hen coop, about half a mile distant, in which some persons were engaged in religious exercises. The fourth person of this trio was not present, being detained at home by a sudden attack of sea sickness, which he had caught from his next door neighbor, who lived fourteen minutes from home, in the country. Being endowed with superhuman strength, by the sudden attack of the Saracen, he seized the wagon by the hind legs and sculled across the everglades as fast as his legs could carry him. But the young lady who was killed, seeing that she had sustained no injury, offered to give her note of hand for the balliance.'

Having a buyer in New York all the time buying goods for cash only, the Red Front Clothing House can substantiate all it advertises and sell goods lower than other Houses can buy them for.

Editors on the Rampage.

AN EXCURSION TO NEBRASKA.

A Magnificent Country and an Enterprising People.

The editorial excursion from Chicago to Lincoln, Nebraska, terminated last Monday, without accident, leaving the participants deeply impressed with the generous welcome extended by the citizens of the various places of interest which they visited. The arrangements were perfect and the many pleasing features of the excursion, without anything of a vexatious character, will leave a happy impression upon the minds of all as one of the bright, particular occasions of their life.

The party was composed mainly of the members of Editorial Association of the Tenth and Eleventh Districts of Indiana. Assembling at the Treemont Hotel, Chicago, last Tuesday morning, June 27th, they stepped aboard the handsome palace car "Australia," of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, and were soon whirling over the grand prairies toward the setting sun.

THE BURLINGTON ROUTE.

Through the kindness of A. E. Touzalin Esq., Gen. Pass Agent of the above road we were provided not only with passes, but with accommodations not surpassed by any other route in the country. With these special preparations we anticipated, as we afterwards realized, a most delightful journey, and associated as we were with that refinement, intelligence and courtesy so inseparable with journalism, the horrors of a tedious ride were dissipated, while the time passed as we are want to spend it in our parlors, with the additional attraction of ever changing scenery. Passengers are carried over this route from Chicago to Omaha or Plattsmouth, a distance of 500 miles in one day. In journeying from the East to Kansas via Burlington, you enjoy advantages you can secure on no other line.

PLATTSMOUTH.

On Wednesday morning we arrived at Plattsmouth, on the Missouri River. Here we were met by a large delegation of citizens and welcomed in a neat little speech by Gen. R. R. Livingston, which was responded to by President Stoll. Being furnished with private conveyances we were soon viewing the many attractive features to be seen on every hand. Here we behold for the first time the grand prairies of Nebraska; the wide, billowy green dotted all over with golden islands of harvest; the hollows of dark glittering maize; the park-like clumps of timber along the course of streams; the soft airy lue of the distant undulations; these were the materials which went to the making up of every landscape, and of which, in their sweet, harmonious, pastoral beauty, the eye never grew weary. After enjoying this scene for nearly two hours, we started for the capitol of the State,

LINCOLN.

A marvel of wonder, a monument of the stupendous enterprise of her pioneers, Nebraska may well feel proud of her capitol, and glory in the triumphs of her citizens. But three years ago, in the heart of a naked, rolling prairie, whose fertility was its only merit, there stands to-day, a real, live interesting city, with her stately capitol buildings looming up on the one side, and her magnificant educational institutions on the other, and where, three years ago, not a house appeared to break the monotony of the scene, now stands massive business blocks and handsome residences, churches, schools and manufactories, and the end is not yet. With a population of four thousand, all acquired in this time, what will it be a few years hence, with the bright future now apparently in store for her?

The soil and climate is simply wonderful, possessing every merit that can be desired. We regard it as one of the finest agricultural regions in the great west, and can assure our readers that if they contemplate a visit west by all means go to Nebraska. Those broad, productive acres need thousands of workmen. All men of families who intend cultivating the soil, and have some little means to commence operations with and lead them through their first year of pioneer life, will soon have a good home and see themselves surrounded by comfort Many have went there with families and without means, have succeeded in gaining affluence and a golden remuneration of their labors. Arriving at the depot, at noon, we were escorted to the several hotels and in the afternoon provided with conveyances, we were shown over the city. The Salt Basin, about a mile west of the city, is perhaps the greatest feature of this part of the country. It consists of a large flat, containing several hundred acres, now covered with a white coat of salt evaporated by solar heat from the water that ebbs and flows over it. The supply is claimed to be inexhaustible, the water containing on an average, 90 per cent, of salt deposits. An artesian well has been sunk to the depth of 600 feet, out of which flows for about twelve hours of each day, a large current of strong clear water, sufficient to supply a dozen manufactories.

Only one has as yet been erected, however, but a stock concern, with large capital has been organized, we were told, to work up the interest and we doubt not that Lincoln will ere long supply that large scope of country with a good article of salt.

In the evening a formal reception was given at the capitol buildings, and the Buffalo Barbacue discussed. Speeches were made by many prominent citizens, among them Gen. C. F. Manderson, of Omaha, Gen. Strickland, Gov. Butler, who by the way, has been ousted for malfeasence in office, Judge Kinney, and Hon. F. H. Marquette. A dance followed in the Hall of Representatives, and it was quite late before the gay and happy occasion was brought to a close. We do not wish to lose sight of one fact here in this connection and that has reference to another important and meritorous institution of the place—"The Townley House" of which it was our fortune to be a guest.—The proprietors, Messrs. Hamlin & Brown, are posted as to keeping a good hotel, and we were pleased to notice the encouragement they are daily receiving from the traveling public. Chas. D. Roberts supplies a free buss, and everthing is covenient for the traveler. While here we made the Statesman office our head quarters, and the gentlemanly publishers, Messrs. Randall & Smails, showed us many courtesies that we would gladly reciprocate on the first occasion. They have opend up a fine office, and have recently began the publication of a Democratic daily, which is meeting with great encouragement from the citizens. The opposite party is well represented by the Journal which seems to be in good hands, to judge from the neat appearance it presents.

NEBRASKA CITY.

After a short visit to Crete, the next morning, over the new railroad now being extended west from Lincoln, the excursionists accepted an invitation from Dr. Converse, to visit Nebraska City, over the Midland Pacific R. R., an excellent road that has been recently completed between these two points. Leaving at 2 o'clock p. m. we arrived at our destination in due time, and were met by a large delegation of citizens who greeted us with a proposition to accept their hospitalities, for at least one day. This was more than we anticipated and a meeting was held at the Barnum House to consider the matter. The arrangement was submitted to by a unanimous voice and the princely style in which we were entertained, more than repaid us for the departure we had made in our regular programme.

Nebraska city is located on the west bank of the Missouri, about fifty-five miles south of Omaha, and we regard it as the finest and most beautiful city in the State. Its business houses and school buildings certainly gave evidence of its great thrift and enterprise and therefore cluded to change our course and return via Omaha. A few carriages were in waiting at the depot upon our arrival, but by some unfortunate circumstances no preparations had been made for our entertainment. We do not question the taste or propriety of her citizens in not meeting us with the same cordiality as other cities, and do not propose to utter one word of reproach at her seeming indifference to our presence. Our friend, the Doctor, was no doubt greatly embarrassed, but we can assure him, that every visitor understood the situation, and regard [illegible] vanced state of the improvements in and around the place, as far as the eye can reach, surely betokens a progressive spirit far ahead in the march of civilization, and development of this great country. But it is not only to her beautiful location, and the great natural wealth of her surroundings that she is indebted for the great progress she has made in so short a time, but to that spirit of liberality and enterprise that seems to characterize the action of her citizens. We can draw no parallel between this, and even older cities, of equal size and importance so great does this spirit enter into and contribute to every feature of the place. Located in an agricultural region, unsurpassed in fertility, with an inexhaustible soil, a salubrious and healthful climate, well does she appreciate her position by an exhibition of that talent and energy that gives her prestige even among her rival neighbors.

The reception which we met here was simply magnificent and filled every visitor with a high appreciation of the true merits of the people. One of the neatest banquets we have ever witnessed, was given at the Barnum House, in the evening, which was enjoyed more largely than any other feature of the whole tour. Major Tuxbury greeted us, through his next friend, Major Calhoun, and President Stoll responded, when commenced a series of toasts and repartees, all teeming with that heartfelt cordiality and welcome, that met a response in every heart. The next day the usual sight-seeing was indulged in, so that none went away without seeing, on every hand, the tangible results achieved by these people of energy and perseverance and none were there but what accorded them their due meed of praise. We say to all intending to go west to go to Nebraska, go to this city, where your lot will be thrown with a hospitable people, who will greet you with a hearty welcome and assist you to climb instead of kicking you down the hill of prosperity.

OMAHA.

Omaha, the land of George Francis Train, and the best advertised city of the west—somewhat over pretentious and yet possessing many features of beauty and interest to the traveler. A visit to this city was somewhat out of the line of our programme yet at the request of Dr. Graff a very aimable gentleman, of that city, who met us at Nebraska city, we consider him as an agreeable and high-toned gentleman. Omaha is a beautiful place, prettily located at the foot of and along the side of the bluffs, presenting a picturesque and lovely scene when viewed from the opposite shore of the river. On the old capitol grounds is being located one of the finest school edifices in the west, and in enterprise of great moment Omaha is up to the standard of modern cities. A magnificent bridge is being built across the Missouri at great expense and a thousand other features adorn the place that make it an attractive an interesting point for the visitor. The next morning we entered our palace car, and went whirling over the grand prairies on our return, thoroughly convinced that what had been said of Solomon was applicable to the far west, the half had not been told. No one can truly contemplate the greatness and grandeur of our glorious country until they have seen this part—the lovliest and most beautiful to be found in the world.

New Arrival.—Our legal friend, W. H. Dills, Esq., was favored with one of those little domestic episodes that will happen in the best regulated family. Said episode weighs about eight pounds, and is of the female persuasion. Tally one for D.

Davenport keeps everything in the drug line, besides stationery, wall paper, and fancy articles of every description. Give him a call.

Eel River Railroad.

The Columbia City Post says that work on the Eel River Railroad is progressing with great rapidity. A large lot of iron is already at this point, and track-laying has commenced in earnest. Two new locomotives and quite a number of flat cars arrived the first of the week. Track-laying will proceed with all possible dispatch, east and west from this point. The doubters and false prophets are doomed to disappointment. The building of the D. E. R. & I. R. R., from Detroit, Mich., to St. Louis, Mo., is no longer an uncertainty, but a certainty. Time will demonstrate the great benefit this road will be to Whitley County.

We also find an address of President Collins in the papers of the above place to the citizens of Whitley County, in which he says:

"It will require every dollar of subscription of every name and character to make the payment to our contractors we are bound to make. Therefore, I ask those of you, without further solicitation who are subscribers to the capital stock to call at once and make payment, and and those who have given their notes will please prepare to pay them when made due to their terms. But little over one month will elapse before the locomotive whistle will be heard all along the line from Columbia City to Manchester."

The following resolutions were adopted on the Palace Car, "Australia," by the unanimous vote of every body:

Resolved, By the editorial association of Northern Indiana. That, we cheerfully bear testimony to the fact that F. S. Bedell, of the Crown Register, is not dead, but liveth as we have occular proof thereof

Resolved. That the remark, "Ignorance is bliss," does not apply to Capt. Bliss of Crown Point.

Resolved, That we indignantly deny that Baker, of the Columbia City Commercial, walked up the bluffs at Lincoln to avoid the payment of fifty cents, when there was a free buss.

Resolved, That we refute the slanderous charge, that in nominating Colfax for president, at Lincoln, it was Bro. Beals' object to secure his own appointment as Post Master General, under the new administration.

Resolved, That we sympathize with Dr. Van Waring, of the Warsaw Union, and think he had sufficient cause for complaint, in the fact, that the conductor of the dining room car refused to sell him five cents worth of ale, out of a fifty cent bottle.

Resolved, That having deeply sympathised with Mr. Mattingly, of the Rochester Spy, in the loss of his beautiful "purp," at Burlington, we now rejoice at his recovery on our return, on the principle, that "their is more joy over the return of one dog, than over ninety nine that goeth not astray.'

Resolved, That the great battle fought by our noble President, J. H. Stoll, at the Wyoming House, in an engagement with bed bugs and his subsequent immersion in the Missouri River, are facts alike creditable and brilliant for one so young, and that his capacity as a champagnist, which occurred him a great victory over the mayor of Omaha, was only equaled by his magnificent receptive faculty for roasted Buffalo. And your petitioners will ever pray.

We call the attention of the public of the large establishment the Fort Wayne merchants. It is now one year since the Red Front Clothing House, in No. 5 Keystone Block, opened with finest and largest stock ever opened in that city, which they gained by their fair and honorable dealing, and are at the present deriving almost the entire trade in their line in that city. Reason shows fair dealings to all. They sell goods at retail and wolesale prices. They have three stores in different places, which makes their business extensive so as to keep a buyer in New York all the time.—Every dollar's worth of goods brought by their stores which enable them to sell twenty per cent. lower than any other house, which of itself as a large profit they sell goods at such low prices that the oldest established houses, of the city, are laying idle while their stores are crowded daily by customers.

The Hand of Friendship.

Mr. W. H. Evans, the editor of the Princeton Democrat, has been one of those unfortunate individuals who allow themselves to be slaves to the intoxicating cup and whose greatest enemies are themselves In his paper of the 10th inst., he makes a public declaration of his intention to be temperate from that time forward, and to lend what influence he may have to the cause of temperance, calling upon his many friends for their countenance and assistance in a reformation.

It is the duty of every man, and particularly so of the members of the fraternity to extend the hand of frienship to him who is struggling against the tide of passion and appetite, and we hope that Bro. Evans may be so encouraged that he will continue in his reformation until his feet are firmly pleated on the solid rock of manly self control.—Ligonier Banner.

We don't know you personally, Bro. E., but if you're a man you won't give an inch in this new resolution until you are master instead of whisky. We're holding out our hand to you, and bid you stand firm.

Corinne, Utah Territory, is not pleasant to the eye on a first glance from the railroad. It looks like a scattering pile of good-sized dry goods boxes. Slight, wooden buildings are the chief component parts of the city, and its fate, in the event of conflagration during a high wind is not difficult to predict.

The risk of refusing liberal offers is shown in the case of William Bradley of Meriden, Conn., who declined to take $15,000 for his horse Levithan a fortnight since. A day or two ago he had to pay $5 to get rid of the animal who had died of a spasm in the meantime, and needed to be carried off.

A showman in Maine wanted to exhibit an Egyptian mummy, and attended at the court-house to obtain permission. "What is it you want to show?," inquired the Judge. William L. Barry, a compositor on the Lebandon (Tenn.) Herald, has just passed his ninty-first birthday. he is promptly at his case at seven o'clock every morning, and sets six thousand ems a day without the least difficulty. Experiments were made with fifteen-inch guns last week, at Fortres Monroe, to test the strength of some massive platforms for heavy guns. Result demonstrated that the platforms are equal to the severest tests, but that it is almost an impossibility to make a gun carriage of sufficient strength to withstand the weight and recoil of these guns charged to their fullest capacity and elevated to an angle of thirty degrees,

The contents of Thiers' house, destroyed by the Commune's orders, were worth $400,000. The little bronzes alone that it contained were estimated in value at $300,000. There were also many bibliographical treasures belonging to the archives, and some extremely curious papers. Thiers was very much attached to the house, he had resided in for thirty years, and it is feared he can never collect again his scattered treasures of art, antiquity, and literature, which were all caried away by order of the commune when the house was pulled down.

A man of the South lately caught an alligator, and cultivated his acquaintance until he considered himself so thoroughly establised in the reptile's confidence that he could do anything with him. He then sat forth to make show of his scaly friend, exhibiting such agreeable tricks as stretching open his ponderous jaws and running an arm down his throat. The monster stood it for a while with considerable equanimity, but finally, at Wilmington N. C., when the tempting morsel was put between his teeth, he yielded to the temptation, snapped it off at the shoulder, and devoured it without remorse.

The Old Testament miracle of the feeding of the Israelites in the desert with manna, has always been a hard nut for scientific men to crack. There are some interesting facts though, which may throw some light on the subject. The tamarisk tree, which abounds in Arabia, drops a sort of substance, called by the Bedouins and eaten with their bread. It is supposed that it excludes through the bark from punctures made by insects, and falls to the ground in a solified state. It is of a sweet pleasant taste, and the Bedouins are very fond of it, using it with their black bread.

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

J. WALKER, Proprietor. R. H. McDONALD & CO., Druggists and Gen. Agents, San Francisco, California, and 32 and 34 Commerce Street, New York.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

An ingenuous youth in the oil regions lately hired hands to commence boring.—The foreman asked 'what kind of a well he wanted to put down,' meaning with large casing or small. 'Well,' was the reply, 'I guess you'd better sock down a hundred barrel well; that's as high as they run now, ain't it?'

It's useless to sing the siren songs of peace while this sort of thing goes on.—Even the hens down in Geogia have gone into the Ku-Klux business. One of 'em, in Houston county, in utter defiance of the amendments and the civil rights law foully falls upon every black chicken she sees and forthwith kills it. Where are the troops?

There is again talk to the effect that Froude, the English historian, will come across the sea and deliver a course of lectures in Boston. But as all the Bostonians are in the lecture business themselves it is not easy to see where the audience would come from. Mr. Froude had better try some locality where lecture-making is not the principal industry of the people.

"Sam," said one little urchin to another, "does your schoolmaster ever give you any wards of merit?" "I s'pose he does," was the reply; "he gives me a thrashing evey day, and says I merit two."

Wirt and Webster in a Trial of Wit

Daniel Webster was once engaged in the trial of a case in one of the Virginia courts, and the opposing counsel was Wm. Wirt, author of the 'Life of Patrick Henry,' which had been criticised as a brilliant romance. In the progress of the case, Mr. Webster produced a highly-respectable witness, whose testimony (unless disproved or impeached) settled the case and annihilated Mr. Wirt's clint. After getting through the testimony, he informed Mr. Wirt with a significant expression, that he was through with the witness, and that he was at his service. Mr. Wirt rose to commence the cross-examination, but seemed for a moment quite perplexed how to proceed, but quickly assumed a manner expressive of his incredulity as to the facts elicited, and cooly eyeing the witness a moment, he said:

'Mr. K——allow me to ask you if you have ever read a work called the 'Baron Munchausen?'

Before the witness had time to reply, Mr. Wedster rose quickly to his feet, and said:

'I beg your pardon, Mr. Wirt, for the interruption; but there was one question forgot to ask the witness, and if you will allow me that favor I promise not to interrupt you again.'

Mr. Wirt, in the blandest manner said: 'Yes, most certainly;' when Mr. Webster, in the most deliberate manner, said: 'Sir, have you ever read Wirt's 'Patrick Henry?'

The effect was irresistible, and even the Judge could not control his rigid features Mr. Wirt himself joined in the momentary laugh, and turned to Mr. Webster, said:

'Supposing we submit this case to the jury without summing up,' which was assented to, and Mr. Webster's client won the suit.

Western Justice.

Several years ago, when the West comparatively a new country, an individual presented himself at the door of a log grocery in a settlement since abandoned, and asked if there was a judge in the place. Upon being informed that the storekeeper himself was a judge, the stranger proceeded:

'Well, judge, you see the facts in the case are these: I was travelin' along with a pardner down here apiece, and he showed me a silver dollar which he had. Well, I popped him under the ear with my pistol. Then I took his silver and tobacco and cum along alone; but I got to thinking the matter over, and I don't think I did just the right thing by my partner.—My conshuns has been troublin' me, and I think I ought to be hung. Now, Judge, if it ain't be too much trouble, I'd like to have you try me and have me hung. If you doubt the facts in the case, there is the dol ar I took from my pardner, and you'll find his remains down the road apiece under a log. I'll feel obliged to you, Judge, if you'll have me hung.'

The judge told the stranger to make himself comfortable over at the hotel until he could send some men down the road to investigate the matter, and if they found the body he would call a jury and try the stranger, as was desired. The dead man being found, the judge summoned a jury, and sent word to the stranger at the hotel that if he would step over to the store they would give him a trial.

The stranger appeared immediately, shook hands with the judge and jury, invited the court to take a drink, and appeared grateful and satisfied with the proceedings.

The trial proceeded socially, and the tender-hearted jury brought in a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the first degree. A load of anxiety, which the stranger had worn up to this time, faded from his face as he stood up to receive his sentence. 'You have been found guilty,' said the Judge, 'of the crime of manslaughter, for which you are undoubtedly penitent.' Her the stranger again bega to get anxious and uneasy.

'And if,' proceeded the judge, 'it meets your approbation, we will try to hang you next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock a. m. In the meantime, try to make yourself as comfortable as possible.'

The stranger looked a little sad, and the judge asked him if he wasn't satisfied. If there was anything that he could do for him.

'Judge, I have to be particular and fussy,' said the stranger, 'but havin' the ague and fever, the chills come on at 10 o'clock in the mornin,' and if you could have me swung off before that I should feel obliged.'

'Of cours,' said the judge, 'we always respect a party's feelings. No trouble sir. Come around at nine o'clock, and may be we'll get through before church time.

Sunday morning at nine o'clock the stranger came out of the hotel and proceeded to the grocery. There he met a deputation of citizens, one of whom threw a lariat over a tree, and, as soon as the stranger had taken a chew of tobacco and shaken hands all around, they hauled him up.

THE MAGNIFICENT.

In the ancient Roman city of Bath, about the end of the last century, while it still retained much of the fashion and celebrity it had reached in the days of Beau Nash, the frequenters of the pump-room and the balls were divided into two rival factions, and long and fierce were their quarrels over the topic of discussion. This was neither more nor less than the not inappropriate one of the merits of two rival doctors, who divided between them the smiles and guineas of the elite of Bath. Dr. Heathcote, the senior of the two, long ruled over the internal economy of the upper class of patients with undisputed sway. He was a handsome, dapper, dignified, well dressed and well-spoken little gentleman, with undeniable manners, silk stockings and shirt frill. Among the dowagers his word was law. At whist or piquet he was an oracle and not unfrequently the younger ladies would confide to his safe ear and kindly counsels maladies of the heart. If he did bow a little low to a baronet, and still lower to a coronet, it was his only foible; and as this was part of his professional manner, it was pardonable and not unpopular.

The reign of this Æsculapian potentate was at last rudely disturbed by the arrival of a pretender to the throne. Where Dr. Lenoir came from who he was, or where he had previously practiced, no one knew, or, to tell the truth, had ever ventured to ask. He was a man of immense frame over six feet in height, with a large head, black eyes, and a good-tempered, sanguine complexion. He had commenced his Bath career by becoming the tenant of a large house on the outskirts of the town, which rumor said was used as a lunatic asylum. But he made his appearance in the pump-room and the evening recreations, and, as he proved to be a man of wit and information, soon became a favorite with the lounging society of the place. Even in his most familiar moods, however, he had something formidable about him. No coxcomb ventured to ask him questions and he assumed a quiet superiority which was only not galling because it was so thoroughly good-tempered.

With his patients he was exactly the reverse of the reigning sovereign. He was gruff to the great, kindly to the poor, to children gentle as a woman. Rules of practice he set entirely at defiance, and was said by his enemies to toss up for each case whether he could kill or cure. Cure, however, he did many cases apparently hopeless, and by devoting much care, and soothing the suffering he could not cure, and making the approaches of death less agonizing, he earned the gratitude of surviving relatives. Such were the rivals, for whom the card tables of Bath waged war.

The rivals themselves were sworn brothers. Dr. Heathcote at first was scornful, and then was testy; but he could not resit the spell which Dr Lenoir seemed to wield; and although at consultation and on professional visits he wore his dignified sneer with due propriety, many a hand at piquet did he hold with brother physician, and when none was by to see or hear, would make his old consulting room ring with laughter at the exuberant humor of his companion. Lenoir, on the other hand, bowed in public, with the modesty of a younger man, to the more mature practitioner, and assumed his place with so much kind-hearted deference that the other was entirely disarmed. But a kind of undefiend pump followed his footsteps. In the pump room and at the balls he had a chosen place which no one ever usurped; and he went by the name of 'Doctor Magnificus,' which contracted by the unlearned into The Magnificent, was his ordinary title.

Dr. Lenoir had been about three years at Bath, when the events happened of which I am about to speak. Little more was known of him then than when he first arrived. It was known he was unmarried; but he was plainly not marrying man. He flirted in his good-humored way with all the pretty girls, but it was evidently flirtation of society, not of the heart. It was also certain, by his style of living, that he was in easy circumstances, and that he had resources other than his profession. The only instance when he ever unbent from his superb demeanor was when in company with Mrs. DeGrey, an exceedingly beautiful and attractive woman, who, with her husband and two young children, had lived for more than a year at Bath. Dr. Lenoir plainly admired her very much.

Colonel DeGray was a good looking man, with a military air, and manners which bespoke knowledge of the world. He was not favorite, for his demeanor resolved to the crowd, although, when at his ease, he could converse with animation, and was well read and well traveled. But his wife was all that was charming. Liverly, spirited, kindly and thoroughly true, without a dash of self conceit, or a thought of evil; ready in repartee, sparking in small talk, but with an ever open heart and hand for real sorrow, she was the joy of all who knew her: and very earnestly distressed were the pumproom gossips when they heard that Mrs. DeGrey was seriously ill.

Col. DeGrey affected Lenoir's society much, for his powers of conversation were remarkable, and they had many tastes in common. But when his wife was taken ill, he sent for Dr Heathcote, to the amusement of Bath scandal-mongers, who set down to a slight infusion of jealously. Now and then, as Lenoir stood leaning like a Hercules against his accustomed pillar, some wag, who thought himself privileged, launched a shaft at him with this barb to it; but Lenoir, without the slightest discomposure, or even alluding to the gibe, shot back some sarcastic remark on his assailant, which made tingle to the tips of his fingers. But he inquired with real solicitude of Dr. Heathcote as to his patient's health.

"To tell you the truth, my dear fellow," said Heathcote one day, "I wish they would call you in; Of course, you know, I cannot ask for a consultation with a junior; but I wish they would pay me off and take you. I am fairly puzzled; and all the medicines I have given her seems to make her worse."

"No wonder," said Lenoir, "but, doctor, it would be a pity that harm should come to that poor ceature because we make up our pills differently. If you make an excuse to let me attend for a day or two, I will tell you, to the best of my judgment, what I think of the case."

So Dr. Heathcote made his excuse, and Dr. Lenoir was called in. And the pump-room scandal-mongers talked more than ever.

Col. DeGrey lived in a handsome villa close to the town; and thither Dr. Lenoir proceeded. The Colonel received him at the door, and shook him warmly by the hand.

"My poor wife is very ill, I fear, and I am sure you will do your best to bring her through."

Lenoir answered this appeal with a grunt, and walked straight into the dining-room, and looked out at the window.

"I suppose Dr. Heathcote has told you the symptoms—that she never can take her food?"

"He has told me nothing. If he had I should not have believed him. I don't want to know anything about symptoms. Can I see her?"

"Certainly. She is rather better today, and very anxious to see you. You will find her in the drawing-room."

Lenoir went up stairs and entered the drawing-room, the Colonel simply announcing him, and then leaving the room.

Whatever he thought of the wasting ravages which a moth had made on that lovely face, he said nothing on that subject, but his questions came more disagreeably than usual.

"You are not to be so cross, Dr. Lenoir; Dr. Heathcote was never cross," she said, with a wan smile lighting up her faded cheek.

Lenoir blushed for an instant, and and then replied: "Cross—yes, I'm always cross with people like you. It's good for them."

As if she had heard what he said, she again addressed him:

"Am I very ill, doctor?"

"Nothing but fancy and temper the matter with you. Why do you mope up here?"

"I cannot go out! You cannot tell how weak, and oh! how sick I am! O, Dr. Lenoir, can you not cure me? If you can't, I shall die, and leave dear Fred and my poor children." And the poor woman burst into a paroxysm of tears.

Lenoir sat until the storm had burst and had spent its force; but tears stood in his own impassive eyes, and his voice trembled in spite of himself when he spoke to her.

"Cure you? Of course I shall, if you don't give way to such folly; and when you are cured you will say you got well of yourself."

"Do you really mean it?" she said, faintly.

Dropping his gruff style, he said, in a softer tone, "I think I can cure you." And with these words he left her, and rejoined the Colonel in the dining-room, and straightway again looked out at the window.

"Quite a common case," he said, as if to himself; "have seen it a hundred times; must have a nurse."

"A nurse!" said Col. DeGrey. "What do you think of my wife? What is her illness?"

"A very common complaint, Colonel," said the doctor, "althoug I have not often met with it in this country. But she must have a nurse who understands sudorifics, and with your leave I will send one."

And without waiting to know whether the Colonel wishing to have a nurse or not, the doctor stalked out of the house.

If any one had seen the doctor's expression of countenance as he strode down to the gate he would not have liked it. Was it wrath, or malignity, or cunning? It was a very unlovable expression, and and not like the doctor's usual face.

Within two hours the nurse arrived; a tall, gaunt French woman, with a resolute set of features, who understood and could speak English when she chose, but not other wise.

She brought with her a small phial of medicine, which she explained to Mrs. DeGrey was to be taken every hour during the night, and the effects of which required to be carefully watched. She seemed to consider this her peculiar charge, for on Col. DeGrey taking out the stopper to smell it, she snatched it away, with a pettish French exclamation, and without much reverence.

A fortnight passed over. Dr. Lenoir came every day. He prescribed nothing but this nightly potion, which was gradualy discontinued; and Mrs. DeGrey began to rally, her appetite returned, and she was apparently getting well. The Colonel was greatly relieved, and was profuse in his thanks.

People began to say that there was no necessity for the doctor visiting quite so often. But the Colonel did not seem to think so, for the doctor dined with him almost every other day. To Dr. Heathcote's inquiries, Lenoir only said, to his great wrath, that there never had been anything the matter with her but his medicines.

One evening, as the Colonel and he were sitting at their wine after dinner, the former said, "When do you think Mrs. DeGrey will be able to travel? I think a change of air would do her good, and I began to fear Bath does not agree with her."

"Soon, I should think," said Lenoir; "and as she is so much better, I propose to be absent for a day or two, as I have business in the country. So, if you think I can be spared, I shall go to-morrow. But don't change her regimen in my absence, nor give her any of old Heathcote's potions. They are all very well in their way, but she has done better without them."

The Colonel laughed and gave his word to eschew the established order of things, and the next morning the doctor left.

Four days passed away, and on the the fifth Lenoir again appeared at Prospect Villa.

Col. DeGrey was at home, and appeared dejected. "Things have not been so well," he said. "Your patient has had a relapse of her sickness; and something has happened which troubles both her and me."

"What is the matter?" said the Magnificent.

"Well, I don't like to inspire suspicion, but I fear that nurse drinks."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because Mrs. DeGrey tells me that see saw her conceal a bottle in her pocket. The woman thought she was asleep, and on her moving concealed it hurriedly."

"Have you observed any other symptoms of drinking?" said Lenoir.

"No, I cannot say I have excepting that her manner is very abrupt and rude."

"I shall probe this to the bottom, you may depend on it," replied the doctor; "and I shall examine her about it at my own house to-night. Meanwhile say nothing more while she is here."

He saw his patient, and found she had decidedly relapsed and was greatly depressed. His visit had little effect in reviving her spirits, and again, as he walked from the house, the evil shadow came across his face.

The same day brought a letter by post for Col. DeGrey, desiring his immediate attendance in London on urgent business; and he started the same night by the mail. Next morning the Magnificent paid the lady a visit. She seemed greatly excited.

"Doctor," she said, "you must take that woman away; she is a drunkard and a theif."

"She may, perhaps," the doctor replied, "take a drop of brandy now and then. But remember what fatigue she has undergone in sitting up with you."

"Well, but, doctor," said Mrs. DeGrey, "she is a thief. I saw her yesterday put my soup into a bottle and hide it in her pocket. She did not know I saw her."

The face of the Magnificent for a moment exhibited great agitation. "If this is true," he said, "I will take her away, and send you another on whom I can depend. The Colonel spoke of fresh air for you; do you think you are strong enough to travel He gave me some direction about that."

"I don't think I could. He surely did not mean me to go before he came back."

"He left you entirely in my hands, and I must make you well, as I said I would."

"Not before he comes back, at any rate, doctor."

"Very well," said he, resuming his gruff manner, "people always known better than their doctors. Good-by; I shall see you to-morrow."

The next day, in the pump-room—"She is off, I assure you," said Mr Henshaw, a dyspeptic barrister, with the tongue of a viper; "she has gone this morning, and so has her nurse, and no one knowns where, excepting that the Magnificent is gone also."

"Who told you? How do you know?" asked half a dozen tongues at once.

"I shall not give up my authority, I can assure you; but if you step out to Prospect Villa, you will find it to be true."

"I don't believe a word of it," said Sir Bernard Brand, a stout supporter of Lenoir, who had cured him by making him drink lemonade instead of port; "I don't believe word of it. It's some of that humbug Heathcote's nonsense."

But when the whist-tables were set for the evening, behold the tale was true, and the universal community of Bath were ringing with it! But to still greater astonishment of every one, there was the Magnificent, looking more magnificent than ever, seated in his customed place, and glancing benignly from under his swarthy eyebrows.

"Magnificent," said Henshaw, "have you heard what people are saying?"

"Yes, Henry, I have heard it."

"Well, what is the story?"

"They say you are not to have that place in the Customs, because you can't keep a secret."

Henshaw's face grew livid, for the place in Customs was life or death to him, although no one knew of it. He plucked up courage, however, and retorted: "They want to know what you done with Mrs. Degrey."

"I believe Mrs. DeGrey has gone to the country for her health. Of course, Col. DeGrey is the best authority on that subject."

"Lenoir," I doubt not you are a villian," said a voice behind him; and, turning round, he saw Dr. Heathcote. "I have just seen the Colonel, and he is raging at the disappearence of his wife. He says she went away last night, and no one knows where. He was on his way to your house when I met him."

"Dr. Heathcote, you jog-trot practitioners judge by the most superficial symptoms," said Lenoir, in the loftiest tone. "I shall see the Colonel if he has returned, and to-morrow I shall take occasion to request an explanation of the epithets which you have used, and the impertinent suggestions of the little lawyer."

"Meantime, with your leave, I shall finish my rubber."

But the party boke up and declined to finish the rubber, at the Magnificent took his hat and walked slowly from the room. His faction retired home in great discomfiture.

Meanwhile Col. DeGrey, in the greatest perturbation, having found his wife gone on to the house of Dr. Lenoir. It was a large, gloomy mansion, with high walls, and surrounded by trees; a dim glimmering light shone over the doorway. The Colonel's knock was not answered at once, and he thought he heard a window open and shut. At last the door opened by a thick-set, powerful man with one eye.

"Is Dr. Lenoir at home?" said the Colonel.

"Yes, sir," said the man, "be kind enough to walk in."

Colonel DeGrey entered and followed the upstairs. He thought he heard the outer door locked as he went up.

He was ushered into a strange-looking room, with very little furniture, and a window at the roof, so high as to be beyond reach. The moment he was in the room the door was violently shut and he was left in absolute darkness.

He rushed to the door, raged and stormed, bellowed at the top of his voice, but no answer was returned. Half an hour had elapsed, and at last a trap in the ceilling opened, and a light appeared through it.

"The matter be coom!" said a voice.

"You scoundrel, you and your master shall pay for this!"

"The master be coom. Will go quoitly?"

Another volley of wrath was about to escape from his lips, when he bethought him that his better plan would be at least to feign submission.

"I shall be glad to tell your master what blackguard he is. I shall do that quietly enough."

On this assurance the trap was clos ed; and in a few minutes the same one-eyed man, with a companion of equal strength, opened the door and invited the Colonel to emerge.

He saw at once that he would have no chance in a struggle and determined to see the matter out, resolving to use violence if he could not otherwise escape.

Passing through a narrow winding passage, a door opened, and he was ushered into a well-furnished sitting room, and there, seated in an easy chair, was the imperturable Magnificent.

The door was closed behind him, and looking around he could not have told where it was.

Lenoir motioned to him to sit down; but giving no heed to the invitation he exclaimed—

"What is the meaning of this infamous conduct? Where am I?"

"In a mad house," said the doctor, composedly.

"And on what pretense have you decoyed me here, you scoundrel, and where is my wife?"

"Don't you think," rejoined the Magnificent, in the same tone, "that should your wife die, you had better be mad for a little?"

"What on earth do you mean?" said the Colonel But his face blanched and he sank into a seat.

"Col. DeGrey, I knew you a long time ago. Do you remember Dr. Geronimo Spiretti at Padua?"

"Gracious God!" said the Colonel.

"I was his assistant when you studied poison under him. I was a lad of sixteen, but you have not changed. Now you know all.

The wretched man for a moment nearly fainted. He tried to speak, but could make no articulate sound.

"Dont glance at the poker. Killing me would be your own death. Listen:

"I knew you from the first, and I mistrusted you from the first, and but for the sweet woman who is linked to you and who still trusts you, you should have met the doom you deserve, as far as I am concerned. But to expose you would kill her.

"I was certain from Dr. Heathcote's account, how the matter stood. I knew you would discontinue the doses while I was there. You thought that was the cause of the recovery, and did not think of Spiretti's antidote.

"I knew the attempt would begin when I was absent. The nurse brought me the poisoned soup. I have had it analyzed in my presence by two careful chemists, and the analysis, and the subject bestowed——Drop that!" he thundered, and dealt DeGrey such a blow on the arm as to nearly fracture it. He had attempted to seize the poker. The pain of the blow was intense for a moment, but Lenoir gave him a glass of brandy, and proceeded.

"Your wife is where none of Spiretti's recipes will reach her. She believes you have sent her there and is content. You will now write two letters before you leave the room. One to tell your wife that you are obliged to go abroad for two months, and requesting her to remain where she is until your return; the other to request me to attend her during her absence at her new residence.

"I shall send the two children to her. At the end of two months, unless the last dose was too strong for her shattered system, she will be quite well, and you may rejoin her. Until that time you had better be reticent.

"One word more. You now know that the Insurance Company, in which you had that policy on your wife's life has failed. Perhaps you do not know that Mrs. DeGrey has succeeded to an annuity of £300 a year from an old friend of the family.

"You stay here for a week, then go quietly to Paris; but, mark; if your wife dies in any circumstances of mystery whether I am alive or dead, retribution will hunt you to the ends of the earth."

"But Virginie—the nurse?" stammered the self convicted wretch.

"Virginie knows nothing excepting that she did what she was told. She has done strangers things than that without ever asking for reasons. She will never open her lips on the subject. You are perfectly secure, for the chemists had no idea on what their experiments were made."

Next day the Magnificent was in his place to the pump-room as usual.

Men looked shy at him, and women looked sly. He was as cool and lofty as ever.

He waited until the room was full, and then, taking an opportunity when Heathcote and Henshaw were close to him, he called out, "Mr. Henshaw."

He took no notice. He repeated his call with the same effect. Lenoir took two strides toward him, and lifting him by his shoulders, placed him with his back to the pillar and then said:

"You presumed yesterday to make remarks disparaging to a lady. You will be kind enough now to retract them or I promise to kick you from one end of this room to the other."

Pale and affrighted was the little lawyer; but Dr. Heathcote interposed.

"Dr. Lenoir, this must not be; I was the accuser yesterday, and you must first deal with me."

"True my dear Heathcote, but I mean to deal with each after their kind. You are a gentleman and a man of honor, and as such I intend to treat you. Read that."

Dr. Heathcote read, to his intense astonishment the following note:

> Prospect Villa, [illegible] 13, 17[illegible]
>
> My Dear Lenoir: As I am obliged to go to the Continent for two months, I hope you will allow me to leave Mrs. DeGrey under your charge, should she at her present residence require your advice.
>
> Yours, very truly, [illegible] DeGrey.

"Read it out, doctor," said Lenoir, and the bewildered man obeyed.

"Now, you slanderous little toad, eat up your calumnies on the spot," said Lenoir to the lawyer.

"I am sure I meant nothing," said he, "I will make you repent these words.

"Eat them up, I say for the last time!" and terribly he looked down upon Henshaw.

The latter quailed. "I admit he said, they turned out not to be true."

"And ought not to have been spoken."

"Go, then and be warned.

"You will hear from me to-morow, however for all this.

"I think not!" said Lenoir, when he had gone. And he did not, for purveyor scandal thought better of it, and transferred his attentions to Scarborough.

"And now, Dr. Heathcote, I presume you retract that epithet which you used yesterday. I admit appearances were against me, but a true physician distrusts appearance."

"I forgive the banter, and cheerfully retract the expression; but after what the Colonel said to me, doctor, if I know what to make of it."

"I never supposed you did," said Lenoir; and the Magnificent reigned in Bath for many years afterward.

The gap in the story you may fill up as suits you best. Lenoir, in his trip to London, had consulted his solicitor who told the story to my late master. The cautious London lawyer told Lenoir he might be hanged for compounding felony, and Lenoir told him he might be hanged for his advice. The annuity was, the solicitor believed, provided for himself; and the surmise was either that he was in love with the lady, or that he knew more of her history than he chose to explain—or probably both. The Colonel and Mrs. DeGray never visited Bath again; but the annuity was paid for many years afterward, the Colonel probably being as anxious to keep his wife alive as he had been to destroy her; and she, poor thing, with the constancy and credulity of women, rejoicing in in her inmost soul at the increased tendernesses of her husband.

Benefits of Laughter.

Probably there is not the remotest corner or little inlet of the minute blood-vessel of the body that does not feel some wavelet from the great convulsion produced by hearty laughter, shaking the central man. The blood moves more lively—probably its chemical, electric or vital condition is instinctly modified—it conveys a different expression to all the organs of the body, as it visits them on that particular mystic journey, when the man is laughing, from what it does at other times. And thus it is that a good laugh lengthens a man's life, by conveying a distinct and additional stimulus to the vital forces. The time may come when physicians, attending more closely than they do now to the innumerable subtle influences which the soul exerts upon its tenement of clay, shall prescribe to a torpid patient "so many peals of laughter," just as they do now that far more objectionable prescription—a bill, or an electric or galvanic shock, and shall study the best and most effective method of producing the required effect in each patient.

The Courier.

AUBURN, IND., JULY 13, 1871.

Grant has made himself very obnoxious to a large majority of respectable people by signing the pardon of Bowen, the bigamist and carpet-bagger. The question naturally arises, how much did Bowen give Grant, to induce that high official to transcend the duties of his office.

The differences pending between Boutwell and Pleasonton in relation to the right to issue beer stamps bid fair to embarrass the beer business. No brewer can sell beer unless the keg is stamped, and no stamps can be issued until the matter is settled. The price of beer may be increased in consequence.

The canard circulated by leading Radicals in Ohio that Gen. Ewing received the Democratic nomination, did not have the effect intended. They now acknowledge their duplicity. A disturbance in the ranks of the Democracy was the motive which inspired the falsehood, but it fell harmless. So much for another trick of the enemy. The Ohio Democracy are united, solid, enthusiastic, and its march is onward to victory.

Horace Greeley has been accused of having spoken eulogistically of General Lee during his late southern tour. At a public meeting held in New York, Henry Ward Beecher lauded the personal character of Lee in very high terms, Mrs. Keckley, the colored servant of President Lincoln's family who wrote a book about her life at the White House, says in this book that on the very morning of the assassination, Mr. Lincoln took up a portrait of of General Lee, scanned the face thoughtfully, and remarked: "It is a good face; it is the face of a noble brave man; I am glad the war is over at last."

Captain Hall takes with him on his expedition to the North Pole a flag which has an eventful and peculiar history. The flag is a man of war boat's ensign, about six feet long and three wide. It was taken out in Wilkes expedition in 1838, and was on the vessel that went futher south than any of her companions. In 1850 the colors were presented to the Grinnell expedition, and were taken further north than any other American flag had ever before been exibited. In 1854, when Dr. Kane went out, Mr. Grinnell loaned him the flag, and it was taken still further north. After abandoning his vessel, Dr. Kane made a perilous voyage in an open boat toward the North Pole. The colors served for his pillow when he slept in the boat. In 1857, the flag was loaned to Dr. Hayes, who took it half a degree nearer the North Pole than it had ever been before. At the completion of each expedition it was returned to Mr. Grinnell, and now it has been placed in care of Captain Hall, who takes it with him in the Polaris.

Governor Hoffman's Letter.

In another column will be found extracts from the splendid letter of Governor Hoffman, of New York, excusing his absence from the celebration of the Fourth of July by the Tammany Society. He distinctly states that the acceptance or nonacceptance of certain amendments which have recently been made a part of the Constitution of the United States is not a practical question. "The civil status of the colored man is established, and he is inactual possession of the light of suffrage." The task before us is therefore to save the Constitution as a whole.

The great questions before the people are very pithily stated by Governor Hoffman. American people "wether they will be governed by force, or whether they will govern themselves." Second, the great question is "wheather we are to be the subjects of what is commonly called a strong government, or shall continue to be, as heretofore, a strong people." Well does the New York Herald say that "amid the corruptions and dangers which surround us, bold, brave, true words like these will be magical in their effects, and help to lift the nation out of the troubles which sometimes threaten to overwhelm it."

Red Republicanism in America.

One of the most blasphemous prayers we ever read, was that delivered by a so called clergyman at the opening of the late Iowa Republican State Convention. The reverend hypocrite coolly informed the Lord that he had "done the fair thing last year by giving 40,000 majority for the Republican ticket" and besought him, the aforesaid Lord, "to double the majority in 1871. Yes, Lord, double it!" During the delivery of the prayer and at its conclusion shouts of applause went up from the Convention, accompanied by such expressions of approval as these: "Bully for the Lord!" "Bully for God!"

How far is the Republican Party of the United States from the Communism, infidelity and recklessness of the Red Republicans of Paris? Its history during the past decade is at least sug-

RIOT IN NEW YORK.

150 Persons Reported Killed.

A riot was reported as raging fiercely in New York, yesterday, caused by the Irish Catholics in trying to prevent the Orangemen from celebrating the victory of Protestant King William III over Catholic King James II at the battle of Aughrim, July 12 1690, by a grand parade. Major Hall issued a proclamation through Supt Kelso forbiding a parade, but Gov. Hoffman heard of it, at Albany, and rushed down to New York, and revoked it, and promulgated his order that the Orangemen had not only a right to parade, but that he would protect them with all power at his command.

So the Orangemen started on their parade at three o'clock p. m., between two regiments of infantry.

We are proud of the noble conduct of Gov. Hoffman. It will show these arrant knaves that this is a free country, and that the rights of its citizens are not to be abridged.

After the procession started they were twice attacked by the rioters, who were quickly put to flight by the police. A large number of rioters were clubbed and taken prisoners. At 26th-st, the 9th regiment charged the mob with fixed bayonets. Several persons were killed and wounded, among them one woman. Col. Fisk was shot through the ankle. Capt. Spencer of the 6th was killed by one of his own men while firing a volley into the rioters. Lieut. Page of the 9th Regiment and an advertising agent of the Grand Opera House were mortally wounded. Between 25th and 26th streets the mob fired three shots at the procession. The military returned the fire, killing eight and wounding thirteen. Two boys and a lady were shot, sixteen citizens and three soildiers were killed coming down the avenue. At the corner of 23d street the 84th regiment fired upon the mob, killing and wounding twelve. One policeman was shot dead.

The fight at 24 street and 8th avenue was more severse than first reported. Over 150 of the mob were certainly killed and wounded Among the troops known to have been killed, besides those already reported, are a captain of the 84th and two privates, and a sergent of the 9th. Five regiments are resting on their arms near Cooper Institute.

Governor Hoffman's Letter.

I have received your invitation to be present at the celebration of the coming Fourth of July, at Tammany, Hall. I regret very much that other engagements, entered into before I received your invitation, put it out of my power to comply therewith.

You do well in calling attention to the fact that again now, as on the great Fourth of July of 1776, the vital question is impressed upon the American people whether they will be governed by force or will govern themselves.

Our recent civil strife led to great concentration of administrative power in the Federal government; but as the war was temporary and out of the ordinary course of events, so this extraordinary exertion of power should have been temporay and promptly abandoned so soon as the war ceased. In the revolutionary struggle of our forefathers, George Washington was for a time invested with powers almost, if not absolutely, distatorial. The moment actual war ceased, this greatest of military chiefs gave up his commission, divested himself of power and left all political questions to be settled by the free and peaceful deliberations of the people. The civillized world, its monarchs, its statesmen, its scholars, its people, looked with awe upon the simple grandeur of the American hero To-day the world at large does reverence to his memory as to no other name among those who have controlled the political destinies of men. The human race takes pride in him; shall we, his own countrmen, surrender our faith in his wisdom?

Our great civil war ended six years ago. The deliberations of our people are not yet free. Powers have been lately confered, under a law of Congress, upon the American President, which ought not to be intrusted to any man, and which no man is good enough or wise enough to wield. At his own direction he may, under this wicked law, suspend in any portion of the country—North, South, East or West—all the lawful rights of its citizens and govern it by military force, subject to no restraint but that of his own will—a power less limited, less guarded, more absolute than that conferred upon President Lincoln in the time of actual war.

The great political question now before us is wheather, in the furture, we are to be the subjects of what is commonly called a strong government, or shall continue to be, as heretofore, a strong people. All political power pertains, of right, to the people; whatever is conferred on the government is so much taken from them What many men call a strong government (meaning of extended, unlimited powers) necessarily implies a weakened people. The two—"a strong government" and a strong people—cannot exist together. This question of whether we shall make the government strong or keep the people strong is one that always underlies our party divisions, but is at times presented more boldly and distinctly than at others. It was plainly presented at the revolution of 1776. The advocates of a strong government lost. It was again sharply presented in the contest which brought Mr. Jefferson into the Presidency, when also the advocates of a strong government were put down. It is again as sharply presented to us to-day, and whatever questions of lesser or more temporary importance may have divided the American people on other occasions, it is their duty now to consider, above all power into the central govern-rate, is consistent with the permanent strength and endurance of the government itself.

Those among us who are advocating what they call a stronger central government are urging a policy which leads inevitably to weakness. A disregard of the healthful rules prescribed by the founders of the republic must end in decay. What we need to insure to our glorious Union long life and prosperity is that we should keep the people strong by limiting the action of the government, too, will then be strong in its simpliscity and its secure reliance upon a free people.

Under a system which seeks by one central agency to look after everything in every part of our extended country nothing will ever be welllooked after. The public service must necessarily become more and more corrupt; for watchfulness over the countless host of subordinate officers becomes an impossible task. One of the most effective measures to-day toward a much needed civil sirvice reform would be to simplify our tax laws, both those which regulate the tariff and those relating to the internal revenue, and thereby to reduce the officers engaged in their enforcement to a number that can be well watched.

It is right that the practice of celebrating the Fourth of July should be kept up by the Tammany Society, founded, as it was, for the purpose of resisting efforts made, soon after its true principles and practice. You will celebrate the day, I am sure, not as mere partisans, but as American, claiming sympathy with and from all who have faith in the Consitution and in the past history of our land, and all who are ready to guard the American system of government as well from decay as assult, It is essential, especially at this time, that our people should be remindedat what cost our free government was established, what vigilance on the part of great leadess it has required to preserve it from time to time, and that they should be reminded, also, that we have here, in fact, the guardianship of the cause of popular freedom for the whole human race. No event could occur that would be more disgraceful in the history of man than that we, with our eminent advantages and with this great trust in our hands, should suffer free government to be lost on this continent and should imitate here the bad examples found in the Old World, making one man and his will supreme over the people and their rights.

We should not omit, on this occasion, to recall to our memory the illustrion administrations, of Jefferson and Jackson, who, when called at different periods in our history to the Presidency, although themselves clothed with the extensive powers legitimately belonging to that high office, and having, each of them, an extraordinary degree of personal influence resulting from the confidence and attachment of the people, abstained from taking advantage thereof enlarge their own powers, but, on the contrary, devoted themselves to restoring the proper limits upon both the executive and legislative departments of the Federal government, which had been, in many respects, overlooked and disregarded by their predecessors. We shall best do honor to the memory of these two great statesmen by ourselves renewing the work in which they were so earnest, restraining unwise and improvident legislation, restoring simplicity and consequent purity in the disposition of Congress to meddle with affairs outside of their jurisdiction, lessening the burdens of taxation, and putting the government once more on the safe track pointed out in the chart left us by the wise founders of the Republic.

The acceptance or non-acceptance of certain amendments which have recently been made a part of the Constitution of the United States is not a practical question. The civil status of the colored man is established, and he is in actual prossession of the right of suffrage. The task before us is to save the Constitution as a whole. To save it as it is requires our best efforts. The question of the day is whether we are to live under a Constitution at all, which shall be construed by an impartial court, so as to limit and restrain, as it was intended to do, legislative and executive power alike, or under a hollow from of a Constitution, interperted, according to the expediency of the hour, by Congress itself such interpretation being enforced by an unrestained Executive. The danger is imminent that we may loose sight of the principles upon which this government is founded, and which constitute its vital force—principles which gave to the Republic great prosperity before the war, and in war, saved it from dissolution.

Very truly yours

JOHN T. HOFFMAN.

THE Chicago Tribune asks and receives $22,000 for a column of advertisements one year. The Business men of Chiago are keen to pay it. ON Sunday morning, "Pet" Halsted well known in political circles, was murdered by a jealous rival in Newark. New Jersey. The New York World gives the following particulars: Mr. Halsted has been cohabiting with a woman named Mary A Wilson, at No. 85 South street in that city. A former patron of this woman, a chaucoal merchant named Botts, maddened with drink and jealousy, broke into the house early Sunday morning, and after a slight scuffle with his victim, who had just arisen from bed, shot him in the heart and lungs, causing death in fifteen minutes. The murderer, after the commission of the deed, walked away, but upon being pursued by a policeman gave himself up. He freely confessed the murder; said that he had premeditated it and was willing to be hanged for it. The news of the tragedy created astonishment as well as pain in New York city and Newark, in both of which Mr. Halsted had thousands of acquaintances. His connection with the Lincoln administration, and Senator Sprague and with numerous political movements during the past ten years made his name familiar to the whole

The Pardon of Bowen.

No President was ever guilty of a more unjustifiable or unwarrantable act than President Grant has committed in signing the pardon of ex-Congressman Bowen, if the report that he has done so is true. That Bowen was guilty of bigamy, there is not the shadow of a doubt. That he was a party, at least, of the procuring of a fraudulent divorce in New York, there is no doubt. There was scarcely a mitigating circumstance in his behalf. He was guilty of the crime charged; the jury so held and the court fixed the penalty. Why should he have been pardoned more than any other criminal? He was an ex-member of Congress and a party friend of the President. That is all. President Grant has taken the crime of Bowen from his shoulders, and placed it upon those of the Radical party. Belonging to the Radical party, according to the theory of the President, protects one from punishment for his crimes. The Radical party under this action of the President, takes the same position in defense of crime committed by its individual members that burglars take toward individual members of their band, secreting stolen property, and swearing them through courts to prevent punishment.

AN UNMERCIFUL FATHER.

The testimony given before the Coroner's jury, on Friday last, at Onarga, Illinois, by Mrs. Mera and her daughter Sarah, in the case of Martin Mera, the examination for whipping and otherwise torturing his son to death, shows the crime of Mera to be one of the most fiendish and revolting in the history of the State. Mary Mera, wife of the man and mother of the dead boy, testified:

THE MOTHER'S TESTIMONY.

My husband whipped Martin two weeks ago Tuesday night. My babe was born on that day, I did not see the whipping. It was done in another room; I heard the blows and heard the child beg for mercy; the child then went to bed; about 10 o'clock the next morning, the child came into my bed-room, followed by his father, who was whipping him. He whipped him very hard with a backsnake horse whip; the child dodged around the room so as to avoid the blows, and begging for mercy; the child was naked, his father having compelled him to strip himself; his face was swollen from the whipping he had received the night before; his father had whipped him very hard for ten or fifteen minutes, and then told the child to put on his shirt; the child made an attempt to do so and failed; his father repeated the order; the child said: "I can't see it." The man devil responded: "I'll make you see it." "No father, I can't see you; father, I can't see you, father," and fell dying; the fiend then rubbed the boy with spirits and forced some down his throat; the child raised his hand and moved his lips and expired; Mera then took the body and put it under the bed where the sick mother was lying, and remained there until evening when he buried it.

The daughter Mera testified that her father had often whipped him very severely with a horse whip. On Tuespay two weeks ago he brought brother in and said he had not worked and whipped and knocked him down twice; father continued to whip him and said he would whip him until he could not stand up; he would whip the life out of him; two or three times he would say this and brother would plead: "Father, father, don't whip me any more; oh, don't whip me any more!" He was a good boy and everybody liked him; brother went to bed about 10 o'clock; he said he did not know why father whipped him so; he never told stories only when father made him; father would say if he did not own that he did so and so he would whip him, and he would own to things he never did; On Wednesday I got up and got breakfast ready; father rose when breakfast was ready; brother got up, but felt so badly that he went to bed; father bid him go out and feed the stock, and when he came back father whipped him and sent him to the field; he went for him and bought him in and made him take off his clothes, and then whipped him; he then picked him up and laid him on the stove; the stove was hot enough to heat an iron; I was baking biscuit; father put him on the stove, brother pleading all the while, "Father, don't burn me; don't burn me;" he screamed very loud and the skin stuck to the stove; his skin came off from his back and his feet, and it stuck to the stove; it smelled so that I opened the door, and father immediately shut it; while brother was pleading father said he would whip him until he worked; I have seen strike mother with his fist several times; he knocked brother down several times; with the butt end of a horse whip; I never saw my brother after he went into mother's room.

This monster in human shape was taken from jail by the citizens and lynched, a fate he eminently deserved.

The prospects of the Democracy in Kentucky, are most flattering and a briliant victory is assured.

The starting Points of this Route are at Chicago and Peoria. The central point is BURLINGTON, on the Mississippi. It traverses Illinois and the whole breadth of Southern Iowa. Near the Missouri, its trunk forks into three branches, for it has three western termini.

Its northern terminus is Council Bluffs, where crossing to Omaha, it connects with the Union Pacific for all places on the inter continental and Pacific slopes. Over-land travel and traffic choose this reliable route more and more.

Its next terminus is Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, fifty-five miles west of the Missouri at Plattsmouth. This is the only direct avenue to the South Platte country, where the sales of railroad land last season, rose to half a million.

Its third terminus is at Hamburg, and Nebraska City. At Hamburg, it makes close connections, twice a day, for St. Joseph, Leavenworth, Kansas City, and the whole South-west.

In journeying then, from the East to Kansas, via Burlington, you enjoy advantages you can secure on no other line. You both pass over a road second to no other in speed, safety, or any Pullman luxury of Modern travel; and while on your way, survey the garden of Illinois and Missouri, as well as 400,000 acres of prairie in South-western Iowa now in market at low prices and long credit.

Keep it then before the people bound westward, to "take the Burlington Route."

Exchange.—Those who want to enjoy accommodations that meet every desire, and at a cost that is within reason, should stop at the Main Street Exchange, monopolized by that popular host, A. Freeman. It has been recently overhauled and refurnished in good style, and will now be found a neat and tidy place to locate while visiting Fort Wayne.

All the Indiana Excursionists will remember with gratitude Mr. Frank Brown, conductor of the Palace Car, who through out the trip wrought most faithfully and happily for the comfort of the guests. He is a gentleman who thoroughly understands his business, is genial and accomodating, and managed everything with excellent tact and judgment.—Laporte Herald.

Enlarged.—The Rochester Sentinel is putting on airs with its fifty-six columns. It is now printed in the quarto form and makes a splendid appearance. Platt must have replenished his exchequer during the late excursion, else how could he so thusly? The Sentinel is now the largest paper in the State, even ahead of Reub's saucy sheet, and we're glad of it.

Another Operation.—Mrs. Henry W. Ford, who a few weeks ago submitted to a surgical operation for cancer on the breast had another operation performed last Wednesday week. This last was accomplished without much difficulty though the patient suffered a great deal more than at the first. She is now rapidly recovering, and enjoys life a great deal more than be[illegible].—The unpleasant odor produced by perspiration is frequently the source of vexation to persons who are subject to it. To remove this odor effectually, it is only necessary to procure some of the compound spirits of ammonia and place about two tablespoonsful in a basin of water.—Washing the face, hands and arms with this leaves the skin as sweet and as clean as one could wish. The wash is perfectly harmless, and very cheap. It is recommended on the authority of an experienced physician.

Railroad News.—There seems to be a great dearth in anything pertaining to news of our projected Baltimore & Ohio Road, but the engineers are no doubt nearing the end of their laborious job, though we cannot tell in what locality they are at this writing. As the Courier is the only paper on the line from Defiance to Chicago we don't have many exchages to clip from, or report to give about the work at points west of us. We are in great hopes, however, that everything is lovely, and working for our benefit and happiness.

It is for you, my friend, to trust God while your "locker" is full, and your family in health, and your life all sunshine. But can you trust him in the storm? When black night shuts down on your horizon, and your household lights go out, and when "deep calleth unto deep," and all the billows go over you—then can you cast out the anchor of faith, and wait for the day? I fear the Master will never say to you, "Great is thy faith," if thou only believest in the daylight and only canst swim when thy foot touches the ground.

Game.—We believe there is a law preventing persons from shooting game in our forest at this season of the year, and yet a great many guns seem to be toted around all going and coming from the woods. Perhaps its just to keep in practice. We hope, the offenders, if any, will be brought to justice. This is a wholesome law, and ought to be obeyed. We are entirely unselfish in this matter, and as we never could shoot a squirrel, we don't want to see any body else do it. If anybody will present us with one or two we'll not say anything about it, you bet.

Early this spring a Massachusetts man planted a tree in front of his house and named it after his wife. Soon the tree died, and the wife lived but a day or two after. Now you would be surprised at the number of men that are planting trees in front of their domiciles and naming them after their respective, if not respected, wives—and the sickliest looking trees that can be found, too—trees that, with the tenderest care, cannot possible live more than two weeks. The dodge is too thin. The women see through it, and have resolved not to die.

Earn What You Spend.—Three-fourths of the difficulties and miseries of men come from the fact that all want wealth without earning it, fame without deserving it, popularity without temperance, respect without virtue and happiness without holiness. The man who wants the best things, and is willing to pay just what they are worth, by honest effort and hard self-denial will have no difficulty in getting what he wants last. It is the men who wants goods on credit that are snubbed and disappointed and overwhelmed in the end. Happiress cannot be brought by the bottle, nor caught up by the excursion train, nor put on with any robe or jewels, nor eaten at any feast. It does not exist in any exhilaration, excitement or ownership, but comes from the use of the faculties of body and mind.

An alleged discovery of a cure cancer from a speific derived from a plant which grows in Ecuador is exciting much interest in medical circles. A curious story is told of the manner in which the anti-cancer virtues of this plant were first discovered. For a long time previous to this discovery the plant had been regarded as a poison. Acting upon this belief, an Ecuador wife who desired to rid herself of her husband gave him a decoction of this plant in his drunk. The fellow was already slowly dying of a cancer in his stomach, but her eagerness could not wait fo the ordinary sequel in such cases. She applied the noxious distillation to his drink and waited to see him fall at her feet. But instead of that the happy husband survived. The subtle essence benefitted has cancer, and the fellow finally recovered from his disease to make known the blessing to the world.

The Case of Dr. Grayston.

The Indianapoils Mirror fall into an error in supposing that Dr. Grayston was expelled from the State Medical Association "for the crime of advertising." He was not expelled, but "handed over to be dealt with by the committee on ethics"—his persecutors contemplating his expulsion, however, "for the crime of advertising." The Mirror observes: "Curiosity prompted us to look for the "card" alluded to, which we found modestly displayed among half a dozen others of the same characted. It ran as follows: "Grayston & Bippus, physicians and surgeons.—office over Blount & Hoover's drug store.' Comment is unnecessary."

We rather think that Dr. Grayston's envious rivals and mendacious persecutors will have an interesting time of it before they got through with his case, and if justice be done it will not be Dr. Grayston, but his unfair and dishonorable rivals, that will be expelled. Let us wait and see whether the State Medical Association will deal justly in this matter.—Huntington Democrat.

We call the attention of the public of the large enterprise of the Fort Wayne merchants. It is now one year since the Red Front Clothing House, in No. 5 Keystone Block, opened with finest and largest stock ever opened in that city, which they gained by their fair and honorable dealings and are at the present deriving almost the entire trade in their line in that city. Reason shows fair dealings to all. They sell goods at retail and wolesale prices. They have three stores in different places, which makes their business extensive so as to keep a buyer in New York all the time.—Every dollars worth of goods brought by their stores which enable them to sell twenty per cent. lower than any other house, which of itself as a large profit they sell goods at such low prices that the oldest established houses, of the city are laying idle while their stores are crowded daily by customers.

[illegible]—The [illegible] has been of an exciting character during the past two weeks in this county, arising mainly from the recent games played between the Auburn and Butler clubs. We gave the result of the first game in our last, and the second came off at Butler last Friday, and was witnessed by quite a large crowd. There was considerable delay, however, before the game commenced, occasioned by the Quicksteps bringing in a new man from Bryan, Ohio, who was made a member after the first game was [illegible]. The Wahalotas objected to his playing and the Quicksteps were equally determined that he should play. The question was, has a club the right to bring in new players, by making them members, after the first game of the series has been played? Now we are not much of a base ballist, but we know enough of the game to discover that this would be a bad precedent for any club to follow because, should they become victorious in a game, their opponents could easily strengthen their nine by bringing in new players, and when they met again upon the diamond field, they would certainly be defeated.

The Auburn boys proposed to play the Butler club, and went there for that purpose, but found a man had been imported from Bryan to play against them. Butler claimed the right to play him, because they said there was nothing in the late rules that debarred the player. They agreed that the Auburn club could have secured players from Kendallville or Fort Wayne, not belonging to any club for the space of sixty days, and voting them in as members, played them in the game. This being their theory, which they put into practice, it would not be Auburn against Butler, but nine picked men against a similar number picked up all over the country. The Wahalotas at first refused to play but in consideration of the facts that there was a large crowd that would be disappointed and that they preferred defeat to going that distance and then not play, they had the magnamity to yield, playing the game under protest. It was easily discernable that the "W's" entered the game without the least spirit or interest therein. The Quicksteps played well in the first inning, running up a large score, but in the latter part of the game their playing was miserable, even more so than our boys showed in the start out, and the score stood much more favorable at the end than was expected at the second inning, when it was 19 to 1. The Quicksteps done some very good batting, and good playing was done by their fielders. The Wahalotas done some tall muffing and poor batting and taken altogether was quite an inferior game.

The two clubs agreed to meet at Fort Wayne, on Friday, July 21st, to play the third and decisive game. There will no doubt be a large attendance of the friends of both clubs and we hope that each club will be given a fair chance and that the best club may win. Considerable betting was done, last Friday, a feature in the game that does not add much to its popularity. This should be suppressed and no betting allowed under any circumstances. If the "noble game" is to become a gambling device, the sooner it dies away the better.

Wahalotas, 25

For the Ladies.

Very pretty fans are now made to look like a butterfly when open.

Head-dresses are getting into fashion again after being banished from good society for some years.

Very pretty glove fasteners are made with dagger-hilt and sheath, so as to look exactly like a small stiletto.

Linen collars are now worn square instead of pointed back and front, and are trimmed with lace insertion and edging.

White kid gloves are no longer worn with full evening dress, the preference being given to lavender, light, grey or yellow.

Very pretty traveling dresses are of light blue ladies' cloth, worn over black silks, and trimmed with black braid and metal buttons.

Sharp-faced girls ought to wear broad-brimmed flat hats. Round checked ones, if discreet, will confine themselves strictly to turbans.

Russia leather belts, with large buckles and small bags attached at side, are very much worn by ladies with all styles of dresses, particularly muslin.

Round hats of white muslin are much affected by ladies for country wear, being cool and large, and with the addition of a flower or ribbon can be made to look very dressy.

No shape of violet ought ever to be used in any sort of evening dress, as the color vanishes entirely under all artificial light. Many a young lady has suffered for not remembering this.

Newspapers.

"What tells us so readily the standard of a town or city as the appearance of its papers? And its youth or its age can as well be determined by the observing as by a personal notice. The enterprise o its citizens is depicted by its advertisements, their liberality by the looks of the paper. Some papers show a good, solid healthy foundation, plethoric purse, and a well to do appearance generally: others show a strife to contend with the grasping thousands around them trying hard to wrench out an existence from the close-fisted community around them. An occasionally meteroic display of its columns of telegraphs or local or of editorials, show what it can do it it had the means, but it cannot continue in the expensive work until support comes, which ought to be readily granted. A newspaper is like a church, it wants fostering in the commencement, and for a few years; then, as a general thing, it can walk alone, and reflect credit upon its location. Take your home paper it gives you more news of immediate interest than New York or other papers: it talks for you when other localities belie you; it stands up for your rights: you always have a champion in your home paper, and those who stand up for you should certainly be well sustained.—Your interests are kindred and equal, and you must rise or fall together. Therefore, it is to your interest to support your home paper: not grudingly, but in a liberal spirit: as a pleasure, not as a disagreeable duty, but as an investment that w-

W. McIntyre, Auditor DeKalb Co., Ind.
July 11th, 1871.

I would respectfully announce to the citizens of Auburn and vicinity, that I have found from past experience that I cannot run business profitably to customers or to myself, and do a credit business. Therefore I shall hearafter sell exclusively for cash, or ready pay.

Those knowing themselves indebted to me will confer a great favor by calling and settling their accounts as soon as possible—and will be glad to sell you all the goods you may want, at as low prices, as can be offered for cash.

T. B. Totten.

Fact.—The eclipse of the moon did not come to time, and a great many people were consequently disappointed; but those who go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport expecting to get a bargain are never disappointed; for he is just now giving such bargains as will satisfy any reasonable man.

Striped hose, with Marie Antoinette slippers, are considered the "nobby" thing for croquet parties among the Western belles now. It also adds to the effects when the stripes match the color of the mallets and balls. If the dress is long however, this is not essential.

Fine black suits can be bought at the Red Front Clothing House from $12 to $14 all finer goods in proportion. Remember the place go see and be convinced before you buy.

Mrs. Belle French's lecture on "Corsets, Tobacco, and Whisky,' has worked a remarkable reform up in Minnesota. One of the papers say: "Every man in our village has left off wearing corsets, and most of the women have quit chewing tobacco and dringing whisky.'

We are selling at the Red Front, good Linen coats at 90c, and the very best for 150, overalls 50c a pair, good paper collars, with linen button holes, for 10c per box.

A short time ago a man in East Liverpool bought a blind horse from a farmer in Hendcock county, West Virginia. A day or two after the horse swam the Ohio river and returned to his former home.

Having a buyer in New York all the time buying goods for cash only, the Red Front Clothing House can substantiate all it advertises and sells good cheaper than other houses can buy them for.

Feed your poultry on raw onions chopped fine, mixed with other food, about twice a week. It is better than a dozen cures for chicken cholera.

About a year ago, eight young girls and as many school boys were out at a picnic in Almira, and took it into their heads to get married. But for the occurrence of seven pairs of twins and one case of triplets next week, their parents would never have known any thing of it.

At Ironton, Ohio, Daniel Lewis died lately of delirium tremens, and his widow sued one Evans, from whom the deceased had been in the habit of buying his whisky. The jury have awarded her $3,000 damages, which will take the net profit clean off from the last 100,000 drinks Mr. Evans has sold.

A prosperous Niagara Falls hackman, after fleecing visitors for a dozen years, now emigrates to Boston, and sets himself up in a $30,000 mansion. Of course he will enter the lecture field, like all the rest of the Bostonians, and tell the world what he knows about extortion.

It is positively asserted that the dogs of Calhoun, Ga., have become so habituated to having tinware attached to their tails that whenever one of them sees a tin kettle lying in the road he backs up to it and waits patiently for some one to tie it on. When you stop at a fashionable hotel on your bridal tour, always write on the register in a carless way, 'Mr. and Mrs. Snifkins,' instead of 'Theodorus Snifkins, and wife,' which is the way greenhorns do it. The Internal Revenue Bureau has called the scientific people to assist in the preparation of stamps. Two new kinds have been devised, and will be brought into use on the 1st of August. One is the sensitive stamp, on which the application of any kind of acid produces a complete change of color and appearance, the other is a stamp printed in colors, which will defy reproduction by the photographers.

The daily "course of study" at Vassar College embraces two barrels of potatoes, one barrel of coffee, two barrels of flour, one barrel of soap, two hundred and sixty pounds of poultry, one hundred and eighty pounds of roast beef, two hundred quarts of milk, one hundred and sixty quarts of ice-cream, and eight hundred eggs. It takes three years of this sort of thing to perfect the girls in all the details of a first rate classical education.

Set on It.

A verdant young man in Maine visited Portland last week for the first time, and in his meandering around town to see the sights, wandered into an engine house.—After gazing at the steamer some time he turned inquiringly to one of the boys, and said: 'Say mister is that a brass band?' And being answered in the negative and told what it was, he continued: 'Wel what do you do with it?' I should like to see it work, but I've set my mind on a brass band, and I thought this was it.

Science.

Clouds have been encountered by balloons at an altitude of 30,000 feet, or nearly four miles above the earth, and heavy rain at a height almost as great. So states Mr. Glaisher, the eminent aeronaut. He says that his observations show the theory that the temperature becomes one degree colder for every 300 feet of increased elevation, to be wholly incorrect. In regard to the color of the sky, he says that when viewed from above it presents a deep blue color, inc reasing inintensity with the increase of elevation above the earth or c ouds beneath.

Sudden Death.

On the morning of the 25th inst., in the village of Syracuse, one Dr. Sprague, died quite suddenly. The circumstances attending his death are about these: The Doctor had been enjoying his unusual good health, up and attending to his professional duties, in fact had just finished preparing a prescription for one of his customers, and started to hitch up for a drive to the country when death overcome him.—His wife hearing him fall, hastened to him but found him breathing his last. Death was probably caused from disease of the heart. Other members of his family we understand have also died quite suddenly from the same cause. How verily this illustrates 'that in the midst of life we are in death.'

Economy in Farming.

Joseph Harris, of Rochester, says that a grindstone, set true, and run by horsepower, for grinding tools hoes, spades, and plow cultures, will pay for itself in a month. He makes his men grind their hoes every morning, and takes a file into the field to sharpen them when they become dull. His men think it extravagant to grind away the hoes; but he can buy a dozen of hoes for less than he pays one of them for a week's labor. Tools cost nothing in comparison to labor. It does not pay to give a man a dollar and a half to load manure with a dung-fork with one or two teeth out. A dull rusty hoe will cost more in a week than a dozen new ones.—Good working horses are cheaper than poor ones. A man and team cost about $600 a year, and it is poor policy to save $100 in the original purchase, and lose $250 or $800 yearly in the amount of work done.

Pulling a Lion's Tooth.

A Glasgow professional man has just extracted a tooth from a lion. The patient was well lassoed. When the lion was somewhat exhausted by struggles to free himself, the doctor mounted on a tub in front of the cage. A piece of wood was placed in the lion's mouth, and at once the beast made a snap. Then a pitchfork was held up, and placed in the mouth, kept it open, while the inside was thoroughly washed. Afterward the doctor, pushing his arm through the bars into the lion's mouth, and running his hand over the teeth, found the loose grinder. A terrible struggle ensued. The lion plunged more vigorously and howled more frightfully than ever, tossing his head from side to side, and at times forcing his hinder as well as his front paws against the bars. But ultimately the doctor triumphed over all difficulties and dangers and by means of powerful forceps extracted the loose tooth, which was found broken and diseased near the root. When the task had been completed the lion sank down completely exhausted, and while he lay steady and quiet the doctor cut the flesh over the jaw and found the bone severely injured, if not broken. It was, however, deemed inexpedient to subject the beast to another operation.

Sawdust.

Saginaw excursionists, at least, will appreciate the following homily on the uses of saw-mills:

I never knew until to-day the object of so many mills—it is this: The soil being composed entirely of sand, requires sawdust to keep it down, so these mill catch pine logs out of the lake in the spring, (every spring large quantities of logs run down the river to get into Lake Huron, and these mill men trap and pen them in booms for future use), and manufacture them into sawdust. In this process there would naturally be considerable waste; the loss, however, is prevented in this wise: The strips off the sides are sold for stove wood. The slices through the logs are called 'boards,' and are shipped to Chicago and other cities, to be made use of in some manner in the construction of dwellings. The 'edgings' off the side of the boards are used for bon-fires, and are only lighted when the wind is favorable to blow the smoke through the town, freeing it from mosquitoes and purifying the atmosphere.

Sawdust is the principal article of manufacture. The streets are paved with it; in m y instances building lots are covered with it to the depth of from two to twenty feet. This a most excellent idea it generally levels the ground with surrounding lots, keeps down the grass, and affords a good foundation for houses, which would otherwise be 'founded on the sand.'

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk. Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

[illegible] of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

[illegible] Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

[illegible] unequaled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

The Montgomery (Ala.) State Journal, organ of the Alabama Republican s talks thus plainly as to certain political libels on the South.

"We have lived in this state for more than a quarter of a century, and have never felt insecure in person or property on account of political opinions. We are sincere in our republicanism, and we feel safe because we love our people, and honestly believe that we are pursuing a course that will redound to their peace, happiness and prosperity. Those men who call themselves republicans, and are continually trying to get into office, stirring up disorder and strife, and poisoning the minds of voters in secret dens at midnight, when honest men and sincere republicans are plotted against simply because they are honest and sincere and have social standing in the community, may feel unsafe. We indorse no such libel upon the whole population of our state. Radical vultures, ku-klux office-seekers of every party, are doing us more harm as a people than all the libels ever written. We believe that every honest man is safe in Alabama, no matter what his politics are."

Greeley recommends farmers to have their laborers sleep in wheat fields preyed upon by the chinch bug, as the bugs will leave the wheat and take to the laborers.

The last ten years of Democratic rule in the country, Maine gained in population 44,550, but during these ten years of "Republican" reign, it has lost 2,236 of its population.

MARCH 4, '71.

A STIRRING [illegible]

Who shall judge man from his manners?
  Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
  Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
  May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thought and feeling—
  Satin vest can do no more.

There are dreams of crystal nectar
  Ever flowing out of stone;
There are purple buds and golden,
  Hidden, crushed and overthrown.
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
  Loves and prospers you and me,
While He values thrones the highest
  But as pebbles in the sea.

Man upraised above his fellows,
  Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters—rulers—lords, remember
  That your meanest hinds are men!
Men of labor, men of feeling,
  Men of thought, and men of fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
  In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam embroidered oceans,
  There are little wood-clad rills;
There are feeble inch-high saplings,
  There are cedars on the hills.
God, who counts by souls, not stations,
  Loves and prospers you and me,
For to Him all vain distinctions
  Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
  Of a nation's wealth and fame,
Titled laziness is pensioned,
  Fed and fattened on the same;
By the sweat of other foreheads,
  Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom,
  Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
  Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
  While there is a sunny right.
God, whose world-wide voice is singing,
  Boundless love to you and me,
Links oppression with its title
  But as pebbles in the sea.

A Device of a Dentist.

A beautiful belle, whose mother kept a genteel boarding house in Amity street induced one of her mamma's boarders to introduce her to a first-class fashionable up town dentist of his acquaintance, as she wanted a set of artificial teeth.

Her mamma accompanied her, and directed the dentist to insert them on heavy gold plates, in the highest style of the art without regard to expense.

On the first visit the young lady's stumps were extracted, and soon she had a mouth ful of gold plate and pearl artificial teeth, which added greatly to her natural charms and acquired graces. But the bill was not paid, and after a collector had worn out some shoe leather, and exhausted his patience in trying to get pay from the mother, the dentist himself called, and, after passing a few minutes in general conversation, he changed the subject and talked business.

Mamma, of course, professed to be very sorry that she was unable to pay the doctor, but would certainly do so in a few days. As he was apparently about to depart, he casually asked the daughter how she liked the teeth, and she replied that they were perfect, and pleased her very much.

'Do they ever slip or pain you?' asked the doctor.

'Very seldom, doctor,' she replied.—'Sometimes they pinch me a little, but I suppose that can't be avoided.'

'Oh, yes,' said the polite dentist, pulling a pair of little nippers from his pocket; 'allow me to bend the plates a little with my nippers, and it will not occur again,' at the same time holding out his hand to receive them.

The unsuspecting maiden pulled them out and handed them to the dentist, who, instead of nipping them with his pinchers wrapped them up in his pocket-handkerchief and placed them in his pocket, and politely but firmly told the beauty that when her mamma paid his bill she could have the teeth again, and not before.

As the girl was engaged to be married to a well-to-do young man who had never seen her without teeth, who was expected [illegible] to the hymeneal altar in a few days, that bill was paid.

Things I Hate to See.

I hate to see a poor horse with a plated harness on; a good horse driven to the top of his speed, or checked up while standing at the post. I hate to see men try to make their horses smarter than they are, or whip them while in a passion. I hate to see a man's horses or cattle afraid of him, or to see him chasing them an hour or two [illegible]. I hate to see one person do all the shaking when they shake hands or have them say more than yes or no. I hate to [illegible] of them. I hate to go after my tool if it has been borrowed. I hate to see a man sitting on his horse, talking to another. I hate to call with a neighbor while at his meal, without being asked to eat.

I hate to see a man eat dinner without feeding his horse, or to ask advice and never take any, or give advice without being asked. I hate to see a young man chewing tobacco, or his mouth running over with the spittle, or his apparel and jewelry outshine his intellect or character. I hate to see an old man get up in the morning and make the fire, then call up a number of big boys; or an old lady get breakfast ready, then call up the girls. I hate to hear apologies for things that would never been noticed without them, or excuses for a poor meal. I hate a tattler, a liar, a hypocrite. I hate after stopping at a tavern to water and clean my own horse, or have him look worse in the morning than when he stopped. I hate a doctor that makes a chronic case or a lawyer that makes a protracted case.

A young woman of Salt Sake, one of the many Misses Young, was recently spoken to by her father, Brigham, in reference to a proposal of marriage from a well to-do merchant of that place. The young woman, with some degree of spunk, replied: 'I have no objection to marrying; in fact, I should rather like to so, and the more the better. I am willing to marry a dozen husbands if you will let me select them myself, but I will never put up with a peice of a man."

Fashions.

Thirty P[illegible]

An old Spanish writer says a woman is quite perfect and absolute in beauty if she have thirty good points. Here they all are:

Three things white—the skin, the teeth, the hands.

Three black—the eyes, eyebrows, and eyelashes.

Three red—the lips, the cheeks, the nails.

Three long—the body, the hair, the hands.

Three short—the teeth, the ears, the feet.

Three broad—the chest, the brow, the space between the eyebrows.

Three narrow—the mouth, the waist, the instep.

Three large—the arm, the hip, the calf.

Three free—the fingers, the hair, the lips.

Three small—the breast, the nose, the head.

An Accomodating Father.

A story is told of a father in a church who, when the marriage service came to the point where the clergyman asks, 'Who giveth this woman to be married to this man?' replied, 'Well, sir, I am called to it, although it do go again the grain. I wanted her to marry Bill Plowser, who is worth twice the money o' that are man.' The answer was not considered regular.

An old, weather beaten trapper was sauntering along the main street of one of our Western villages, on a recent Sunday. Passing in front of a meeting-house, for a moment he went in and took his seat among the congregation. The preacher was discoursing on the text of 'the sheep and the wolves,' and had evidently been drawing a contrast between the two subjects. Said he; 'We who assemble here from week to week, and do our duty and perform our part, are the sheep; now, who, then, are the wolves?' A pause, and our friend the trapper rose to his feet,—'Waal, stranger, rather than to see the play stopped, I will be the wolves.' The preacher pronounced the benediction at once.

The best distinction ever drawn between railway and coach accidents, was that of an old whip. "If," said he, "you gets comfortably capsized into a ditch by the roadside, there you are; but if you gets blowed up by an engine, run into a cutting, or off an embankment, where are you?"

A little Boston girl joyfully assured her mother the other day that she had found out where they made horses—she had seen a man in a shop just finishing one of them for he was nailing on his foot."

A little Kansas girl, who built a fire in her father's barn, and found it getting beyond her control, hastened to hide what she had done by covering it with boards. The motive was pardonable perhaps, but the result was not satisfactory.

Baltimore is to have a new female paper, to be called 'The True Woman.' The name is to distinguish it from the other kind of women who are howling around.

There is a great joker living in Iowa, by the name of Ache, and he has named a newly-arrived daughter 'Bellie,' the short for Belle."

A young lady being asked by a rich bachelor, 'If not yourself, who would you rather be?' replied sweetly and modestly. "Yours, truly."

There is a young lady in Camden studying Latin. She has a beau. He asked her what sic transit gloria mundi meant—She translated it: 'Come and see me on Monday.'

A GUNPOWDER PLOT.

BY JUDGE CLARK.

Old Rumsour was the presiding Judge of the T[illegible] circuit, and the meanest old reprobate that ever disgraced the bench. He rarely went to bed sober; got up every morning wrong end foremost, and generally began the day by some outrageous act of oppression. He was the terror of the bar—all but Shad. Sharkie, with whom it was his normal condition to be several 'chips' behind at 'poker,' which made him, on the whole, rather civil to Shad.

One morning 'Old Rum' opened court in worse humor than usual. A bad run of luck, and too much bad whisky, over night, had told more than commonly on his temper.

The first thing in order to impannel a jury of bystanders—the regular jury, befogged by one of the Old Rum's incomprehensible charges, being, and having been for the last forty hours 'hung' on a question of the title to a yearling calf sworn to positively by six witnesses on one side and a half dozen on the other.

'Call a jury, and be quick about it, Mr. Bumkin, growled the Judge. I held the office of Sheriff, and my right name is Lumpkin, but Old Rum, would persist in miscalling it.

The words were the singal of a general stampede. To be caught on one of Old Rum's juries was generally considered about equivalent to going to jail. But the Judge ordered the doors to be closed in time to bag a sufficient number.

'James Bleerly,' I called out.

Jim shook his head, and tipped me a deprecating wink, which I refused to understand.

'Take a seat on the jury!' I reciterated with official emphasis.

'Judge,' said Jim, stepping forward and blandly addressing the court, "I'd be happy to oblege ye, but the fact is, it's unpossible.'

'What do you mean?' roared his Honor.

'Ye see,' exclaimed Jim, 'it's Pop's wash day—her name's Polly, but I call her Pop—and she's sent me to town arter some bluein', and unless I'm back in time—well, ye know, Judge, how it is yourself.'

Fierce as Old Rum was in public, it was currently reported he was tame enough at home—in fact, that his acquaintance with the proverb of the 'gray mare' was something more than theoretical. At all events Jim's appeal to the court's experience had quite the opposite of a soot ing effect.

'Take your seat on the jury!' thundered Old Rum; I'll—I'll—'

'All right,' said Jim, submissively starting toward the jury box.

'Look'e here, Sheriff, he whispered in passing; 'jest let me go and look arter my critter, and I'll be back by the time you've t'other 'leven,'

T'other 'leven were speedily secured; for Old Rum would listen to no excuse—not even that of Hans Pretzepresser, who sollmnly protested that he could nicht verstehen English.

'Is the jury full, Mr. Bumpkin?' inquired the Judge, looking up from his newspaper.

'Y-yes, your Honor,' I answered, hesitatingly; 'Only Mr. Bleerly has stepped out to see to his horse.'

'Who gave him permission?'

I had to acknowledge I did.

'And who gave you permission to give him permission?'

To this rather complex question, I thought it best to make no answer:

'Call the jury at the door!' bellowed the Judge.

The bailiff sent off to do so, returned with report that he had see Jim Bleerly leaving town at a full gallop; and that, in passing the court house, he had given a sort of a military salute; but instead of touching his cap, he had applied his thum to the tip end of his nose.

Old Rum turned green and purple. It was some moments before he could command utterance. Rage had fairly taken away his breath.

'Make out an attachment for contempt against the fugitive!' he directed the clerk as soon as he could speak—his voice quivering with passion.

'And, Mr. Bumpkin'—he laid particular expression on the B this time—'if you fail to have the culprit here before court adjourns, I'll make an example of you!'

I knew the old sinner well enough to know he would keep his word especially when he would [illegible] he would do a mean thing. So leaving a deputy to act in my place, I took the writ, as soon as the clerk had signed it, and set out to serve it.

On reaching Jim's shanty—it hardly rose to the dignity of a cabin—I detailed my assistants to the act as pickets, and marched boldly up and knocked at the door.

'Come in' growled a gruff voice.

As I entered Jim glared at me fiercely. He was a strapping six footer, all brawn and bone, and ready, at any time, to fight for the love of it. If he hadn't [illegible] as he pretended to Old Rum, he had, at any rate, managed to get gloriouly 'blue," and when in that state he was entirely reckless.

'Jim, old fellow I said in a conciliary tone, 'I've got an attachment for you, and want you to go with me.'

Well, I ain't got none for you" he growled, 'and what's more, I ain't goin!'

I explained that resistance would be useless; that I had a strong force outside; that I should take him alive. But all to no purpose, Jim obstinate enough at all times, dead or in his present condition was perfectly [illegible].

Seeing persuasion was in vain, I signaled my assistants. At the sight of them Jim seized a brand of fire.

'Ye see that keg, Mr. Lumpkin, he said, his eyes bloodshot and his voice huskey,—'well it's full o' gun powder, and by the long tom Harry if one of those onderstrappers comes across my threshold, or if you stay a minute longer'n you can get away, I'll tech her off, so help me!'

Jim, I knew, was a famous hunter, and used to buy his ammunition by the quantity. A keg of powder was nothing unusual for him to have on hand. And then Polly began to cry, and take, on in a way that went to prove the thing was no joke. Besides, Jim was just fool enough to do what he threatened. My two assistants took too their heels like whiteheads, and must be confessed I made a rapid advance in the same direction.

At a safe distance, we rallied and held a council of war. We concluded to invest the place, and hold it in seige for the present.

At the end of an hour Jim appeared at the door, waving a white rag tied to a stick.

'Is that a sign of surrender?' shouted from a safe distance.

'No,' hallooed Jim; 'it's a flag of truce.' 'Ye ain't got no attachment for Pop, hav ye?'

I answered promptly I hadn't.

'Well, I want to pass her out, said Jim. She's getting stericky in case the wust comes to the wust, I shouldn't want to blow the old gal up.'

I thought the proposition was reasonable and said so.

In ten minutes the door opened and Pop came out. She wore a 'scoop' bonnet and kept her handkerchief to her eyes. Her form seemed bowed by grief. We respected her sorrow and allowed her to pass.

Hour after hour went by. I began to grow fidgety. It was already three o'clock. Court adjourned at four; and unless I produced Jim before that hour, Old Rum's word was out to 'make an example of me.' At last I concluded to seek a parley.

'Hallow, Jim!' I shouted, 'I want to speak to you.'

No answer.

I drew near and shouted louder still no response.

An idea struck me. Jim had probably fallen asleep after his apree. If so I might steal a march on him. Stealthily advancing I raised the latch, and gently pushed open the door.

'Wheare's Jim?' I exclaimed.

'Gone these two hours,' replied Pop, punching the fire.

'For goodness sake be careful madam,' I expostulate,' about stirring up the sparks so close to that keg!'

'Land's sake,' cried Pop, 'it's got nothing in but beans.

As the enormity of the sell flashed upon me, I beat, if anything, a more hastily retreat than I did when Jim treatened to blow up his househould goods and me along with them.

'Where's the prisoner?' roared Old Rum as entered the court house alone.

I tried to break it gently; but it was no use. The conclusion of my statement was lost in shouts of laughter. Old Rum's eyes rolled wildly. His face went through the whole gamut of colors. What he would have done heaven only knows or ever can know. An appoplexy which the old whisky-bibber had been honestly earning twenty years struck him like lightning, and he rolled over dead!

At his funeral few sighs were heard, and few tears shed. No word was spoken in commendation of the virtues of the departed. The officiating clergyman expressed a faint hope, but did not seem very sanguine. All seemed to have.

"Come to bury Rumsour, not to praise him."

Requiescat, etc.

THE FISHER BOY'S STRATEGEM.

It was a bright morning but cold withal, in the month of December, 1775, that two men stood upon Hancock's wharf, in the town of Boston. Near them, upon an old cask, sat a boy of not more than sixteen years, who seemed intent upon nothing more than the occupation of keeping his hands warm by slapping them upon his knees. He had been sitting thus about fifteen minutes, when the elder of the two men turned and beckoned him to approach.

'Your name is Maxwell, is it?' asked the gentleman as the youth drew near.

'Hugh Maxwell, sir.'

'Mr Ross tell me that you think you can run your s'allop out of the harbor.'

'Yes sir I think I can.'

'Do you understand the nature of your errand?'

'Only that I must go out of the harbor to do it that's all,' replied the youth.

'Then said the gentleman, whose name was Green—'you are not aware that you may have to remain outside for several days?'

'Nor do I care,, answered the youth, 'if I remain out forever, only that my work shall be for the good of the colonies.'

'There is a large vessel on her way from Glasgow to this place, and our people are in much want of her, so much so that some risk must be run to get posession of her. Now if information could only be conveyed to Captain Manley that she is daily expected, we will be on the watch for her, and if John Manley once gets his eyes of her she is sure to be the property of Washington. Manley's vessel the Lee, is somewhere between here and Plymouth, and we want the information conveyed to him as soon as possible. Do you think you can do it?'

'Yes, sir,' emphatically answered the boy.

'When can you leave the harbor?'

'This very evening if you wish.'

But you are aware that every precaution is taken by the vessels in the harbor to prevent even the smallest boat from going out.'

'I know it sir,' answered Hugh, 'but if you will place your instructions in letter, I will deliver them to Capt. Manley, if his vessel is in Massachusetts Bay.'

It was soon agreed that Hugh Maxwell should call at the house of Mr. Greene after dinner, at which time and place he should receive the necessary instructions, and as the two gentlemen turned to leave the wharf, Hugh followed them till he came to the street and then turning down Ship Street till he came to a small dock just south of Grant's ship yard where lay moored a handsomely built shallop of not less than fifteen tons burden. She was slightly ice-bound but with the assistance of two men, who stepped on board he soon had her in good sailing order and before long he had everything in readiness for the adventure. He had obtained a letter for Capt. Manley, which he very carefully rolled up with in a piece of sheet lead, so in the case of accident he might sink it, and he had also obtained the assistance of four fishermen, who were nothing loth to get out of a place where their daily avocation was placed under such an uncompromising embargo.

It was drawing toward dusk, when an English midshipman came running down Battery Alley, and stopping the sentry, whose post extended from Grant's to Burroughs' wharves he asked:

'Sentry is there a boat anywhere about here that can be very easily and very quickly cast off?'

'Nothing smaller than Maxwell's shallop, sir,' replied the soldier, as he gazed in wonder upon the excited countenance of the young officer.

'Never mind the size,' hastily cried the midshipman, 'only show me where she lays. Be quick, too, or the rebels will have the start of us.'

The sentry immediately led the way to the dock where the shallop lay, and as soon as he had pointed it out the midshipman hailed one of the men that stood on the deck.

'Hallo, there, on board that shallop—how many men have you on board?'

'There's is three of us, sir,' was the reply from the vessel.

'Then start up smartly all of you, and get on board the Commodore's ship as soon as possible.'

'But sir,' urged the man thus addressed, 'this vessel belongs to another man, and we have no'—

'Silence, sir,' hastily interrupted the officer; 'I bear the King's commission, and if you dare to disobey me I'll shoot you the moment you do it. Start up your men, and off your shore fasts. Bear a hand, now.' Then turning to his companion, the officer continued:

'Here sergeant, you cast off that head line, while I jump on board and start up those lazy rebels!'

As he spoke he caught hold of the mainstay and slid down upon the deck, and then drawing the pistol from his pocket, he set the three men about the desired work. As soon as the sergeant had cast off the line, he also slid down upon the deck, and in a few minutes the sails were loosened, and the vessel started out. For the first time the sentry began to think that the officer ought to have a pass, and as the thought found room among the excited imaginations of his brain, he hinted the fact to the officer.

'Ah, yes, I had forgotten,' returned the officer. 'Here you man there forward, get out a boat hook and stop her,' and taking a piece of folded paper from his pocket he passed it up to the sentry, saying as he did so: 'There is General Howe's pass, and when Col. Sutherland comes—he will be here in ten minutes—tell him I have obtained a boat, and shall immediately pass the General's communication to the admiral."

The half-bewildered sentry said he would, and as the shallop put off he very naturally opened the paper he held in his hand, but it had got so dusky that he could not read, and so as the paper looked all right, he very confidently placed it in his cartridge box, wondering very much what important thing had turned up, and also muttering something about being glad that the officer made them 'Yankees' stir their stumps.

The wind was blowing briskly from the northward, and the shallop took it fair, and with flowing sheets she started down the harbor. As she neared the Admiral's ship which lay just off Noddle's Island, the midshipman had the sheets hauled in, and shoving the helm down, the small vessel very gracefully came up under the ship's stern.

'Boat ahoy!' shouted the officer of the deck from the poop of the ship.

'The General's watch,' answered the middy 'is Admiral Graves on board?'

'No—he is at the General quarters,' answered the officer of the ship.

'No, he left there over an hour ago,' replied the middy, 'and forgot his orders, so I've had to bring them off. Can you catch them?'

'Yes.'

'Look out then,' and so saying the midshipman threw a sealed packet up, which the lieutenant easily caught.

'Now,' continued the young commander of the shallop, 'will you have the goodness to point out to me where the Viper lays?'

The lieutenant ran his eyes over the lower end of the harbor for a moment, and then pointing down toward Spectacle Island, he answered:

'Do you see that low light just to the northward of Spectacle Island?'

'Yes,' returned the middy, as he went to the bow of the shallop, and gazed in the direction pointed out.

'That is the Viper. What is in the wind now?'

'I don't know,' replied the midshipman. 'All I can tell about it is that General Howe and the admiral have concocted some plan for an expedition for some of these small fry, and I have orders for the Viper and Spitfire to join it. Good-night.'

'Good-night,' returned the officer of the ship, and in a few moments the shallop was off before the wind.

The little vessel, however, did not get anywhere near Spectacle Island, but as soon as she got out of reach of the ship she hauled her wind, and standing on the northward of Governor's Island, she passed out through Broad Sound, and ere long she stuck her nose into the free waters of Massachusetts Bay.

'Ha, ha, ha!' laughed out Hugh Maxwell, as threw the gold-banded cap of the English middy down by his side, and immediately replaced it by an old sou'wester, saying, 'that is a good one. I guess the Admiral will be as much pleased with contents of his packet as the poor sentry was [illegible] late for the countersign, ha, ha, ha. He swallowed the pistol game beautifully, though. Come, Jack, doff those marine togs, and—halloa! there goes a rocket! there's another. There's a gun from the old North Battery. Our trick is discovered; but fire away my hearties; you'll have to work smartly to catch old Maxwell's shallop.'

The trick had been discovered, but it was too late for the British to mend the matter, for the shallop was far out at sea before anything could be sent in pursuit, and under the circumstances they did the only thing left for them—they made the best of it. Some explanation was demanded of old Maxwell, but he knew nothing whatever about the matter, only that his shallop was gone; but as he had little [illegible] time to use it, he did not feel the loss very severely, especially when he learned that it was under the charge of his son.

Hugh Maxwell run across the Bay the next day, and safely delivered his charge to Captain Manley, after which he ran into Plymouth. In one week after that time the colonists were in possession of the richly laden ship from Glasgow, and for this 'streak of luck' they were solely indebted to the fisher-boy's strategem.

Thrash the Grain Early.

It is always economical to thrash early. We would advise every farmer, who can possibly do it, to thrash his wheat, rye, or oats, as the crop is drawn from the field. There are many considerations in favor of doing this. 1st. By reason of the state of dryness in which it is hauled off the field, the grain is in better condition for thrashing by machine, (or [illegible]) than at any other time. 2d. Only one handling is necessary, and this labor saved. 3d. At harvest-time grain is almost always in better demand, and in the general market often brings a higher price than later. Taking one year with another, it will be found that this is the most advantageous time to market grain. If the farmer holds his grain for speculation very well; he has a right to speculate if any one has, but we hold as a general rule, that so soon as a farmer has his produce ready for market, then is best time to sell. The earliest markets are most invariably the best. We were once enabled to sell the whole of our crop of wheat at a high price, seed, because we had thrashed in time and none of our neighbors had. Lastly and most worthy of consideration is the fact that, by thus early thrashing and marketing, the destruction by vermin—mice, rats, weevil, etc.—is prevented. We believe that ten per cent. at least of the grain put into barns is put there—unintentionally of course, but not the less surely—for the benefit of rats and mice. A granary may be made rat-proof, but a barn cannot, and if it could, would soon be stocked by the animals carried in from the field among the sheaves.

If four horses are kept on the farm, one pair may be hauling while the other is at the machine. If only a single team is kept, they can be unhitched from the wagon, put into the machine, and as soon as the load is thrashed, taken to the field again for another load. While loading, two extra hands may be profitably engaged putting away the straw or cleaning up and bagging grain, or storing it in the granary.

If it is impracticable to thrash the grain as it is drawn, we would stack it close to the barn, make the top secure for a few days, and as soon as possible, thrashed [illegible]. This would tend to save labor as well as grain, and on a small or new farm, where machines are not as yet introduced, any plan whereby labor can be saved is worthy of consideration and adoption.—American [illegible]

MRS. LYDIA D. SHERMAN has been arrested at Derby, [illegible] charged with having murdered, by poison, no less than eleven persons, three of them being her husbands, six her own children, and two her step-children. Circumstantial evidence against her is very strong. The story of her supposed crimes reads like a page out of the history of the Marchioness of Brinvilliers. Certainly no female in this country has ever before been charged with such a frightful catalogue of assassinations. As the case develops it will probably excite an unparalleled interest.

The Courier.

AUBURN, IND., JULY 20, 1871.

[illegible] wears of honorable warfare on his left boot, and he is straightway going to buy Niagara; fence in that wonder of natural grandeur, hoist a tent over the Horse Shoe, and charge admission to the pair. In this undertaking we are inclined to the belief that Jim will come down like the water at Lodore—lashing and splashing, dashing, with his locks [illegible]

It was expected by German statesmen [illegible] the German press, that the unification of their country would result in a cessation of emigration and the return of thousands already emigrated. Both, however, are meeting with disappointment. Emigration is resumed with a vigor that bids fair to make up for lost time. Every outward-bound ship is crowded, and the [illegible] have more applications than they can possibly attend to.

All the murders and outrages in the Southern States, out of a population of twelve millions, are charged by the Republicans to Ku Kluxism. In the North, where they are more numerous, they are denominated under the old names and will not appear in pamphlet form as an electioneering document. For instance the brute in Illinois, who whipped his little son with a blacksnake whip until he couldn't stand up, and then finished his victim by roasting him upon a red-hot stove.

HELIGO-LAND.

This is a euphonious name of a patch of sand and barren rock rapidly washing away, and only 110 acres of it left, over which Bismark is [illegible] and baiting the British lion. Old "Bis" understands his biz sufficiently to commence a campaign through the press and the German press is raising Helige-land, which seems to be the German for "Old Harry," with a vengeance, and claiming that the little speck of an island is absolutely necessary for the safety of the German Empire.

The "Watch am Rhine" is being amended so as to read "Watch am Heligo-land," and the sturdy Uhlans are prepared to charge over the 40 miles of briny deep that separates this coveted territory from the provinces that Kaiser William "Bis marked" away from poor little Denmark a few years ago.

The British Lion, who was the distinguished predecessor of Old Bis, in the game of grab, stole Heligo &c. from little Denmark in 1807. But the Lion not being so lively on his legs of late, as of yore, is now commanded to disgorge the little plunder that he stole from Denmark, to Kaiser William, his heir and assign, who has gobbled up Schleswig, to which the island of [illegible]land, with the sulphurious prefix, originally belonged.

Even as a man who steals a horse, might with justice make reprisals upon the culprit who had previously purloined the saddle, so does the Kaiser propose to rake in the booty [illegible] appropriated by John Bull.

The Spy Business.

The government spy business knows no North, East, South, or West, and respects neither age nor ignorance. At Cleveland the other day, a boy ten years old was seized and thrown into jail for "defrauding" the government by [illegible] the contents of a cigar [illegible] basket, so that he could get among the [illegible] with more convenience. The lad's bail was fixed at $1,000, and the government spy has not yet been tarred and feathered.

Singular Coincidence.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says, the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill—the 17th of June—was an eventful one to Mr. Vallandigham.—Had the horoscope of fate cast its influence upon his belief, he certainly would have regarded this day with superstitious [illegible]. It was on the 17th of June, 1863, that he ran [illegible] and [illegible] the dangers of exile, the sea and [illegible]. On the 17th of June, 1864, just a year to a day exactly, he reached [illegible] and made a speech in [illegible] laboring under an apprehension of renewed military arrest. On the 17th of June, 1871, he met a victim to an unlucky accident from his [illegible] that it was [illegible] after his return, and [illegible] which the figure seven so prominently appears to mark the date.

Spirits in Shelby County.

For several nights previous to Sunday evening, July 9th, one John Roberts, who had just moved in and taken possession of a farm house on what is known as the Wolf farm, half a mile north of London, Shelby county, had been annoyed and even driven from home by divers, strange and unaccountable demonstrations supposed to have been conducted by agents from the spirit world. On Saturday evening in the gray twilight, Mr. Roberts was milking the cow in the barn lot, when suddenly he was confronted by a [illegible] ghastly looking being, the lower half of whose person was to him invisible. Filled with terror and inexpressible fear he dropped the pail and hurried to the house to be met by the same unearthly figure whose neither half he saw suspended against the wall. His wife seeing this terrible spectacle, fainted away. The two children ran screaming from the room. The half frenzied husband, gathered up his unconscious wife, and bidding the children follow quickly departed to the house of his nearest neighbor, leaving his ghostship in peaceable possession of the premises.

Sunday he and his family accompanied by some citizens of the vicinity returned, but all was quiet. When night came on, however, they started again determined not to remain another night where ghost troop forth, but on the way they met two men, Orange D. Reeves and J. W. Andrews. To these gentlemen they recounted the sights and scenes of the previous evening.

Mr. Reeves not being a believer in ghosts proposed to return and fight it out on that line. The family finally returned after much persuasion. Nothing could be discovered as to the motion and noise-compelling power, but a series of mysterious sounds, unaccounted for upon any known philosophical hypothesis, was kept up, chairs and tables upset, clock struck before the time, dishes rattled, etc.

Our informant lying prone upon the floor, felt a thumping beneath him, but as he proposed the investigation he concluded to lie still and take it.

The manifestation continued during the night, and are still to be witnessed by any unbeliever who have the tenacity to spend a night in the haunted house. The persons mentioned above are well known citizens and will vouch for what they saw.—Ex.

Salt and the Tariff.

As this is the season when farmers are using a large amount of salt, for curing hay, feeding stock, etc., we wish to remind them of the unpleasant fact that the Radical party lays a tariff tax of just 108 per cent. on the article. Salt can be produced in Canada just as cheap as it ever was, and it can be shipped into the country as cheap as in 1860. We think this assertion will be freely admitted by all, and when that point is established, the question naturally arises, Why is the price so much higher than it used to be? We answer, It is because of the enormous tariff. "But," says some honest but sadly mistaken farmer, "this is necessary for the support of the government." Not at all; nor do the Radical leaders claim this as a reason for their extortionate demands upon the farmers' pockets. It is done to "protect" a score or so of our home salt manufacturers. The leaders of the dominant party argue that it is necessary to build up home manufactures, and to do so, tax must be laid on all foreign products. In other words, the million consumers must be extortionately taxed to enrich the thousand producers. To oblige a few men at Saginaw and Syracuse, who desire to become suddenly rich, the government, under the manipulation of the Radicals, steps in, and playing the role of Cade, demands a few dollars from each salt consumer, to put in the pockets of its protected pets. How do you farmers like it?—Laporte Argus.

NEW YORK.

After the Storm.

NEW YORK, JULY 15.—Never, during the last twenty years, has New York been so free from disorders of all kinds as during the last two days. The terrible events of last Wednesday have taught a lesson that does not seem likely to be forgotten. Circumstances and incidents of the riot continue to be the absorbing subject of conversation and many additional details of interest are given below.

It is the opinion of every officer of rank with whom the reporters have conversed, that the firing of the militia could have been avoided but a few minutes longer. The crowd was pressing on the police and military, and the several missiles and shots were coming faster from house to house, and a mob in the street. That the soldiers refrained from firing so long as they did speaks well for their dicipline and coolness.

Arrangements were made yesterday by officers of the 93th regiment for the funeral service of their late comrades, Sergeants Wyatt and Page. Four companies of the 71st regiment and the 12th regiment of Brooklyn will also participate in the funeral services.

It appears, by the publication of a letter under date of August 4th, 1870, Mayor Hall sent a letter to Superintendent Jourdan, advising the suppression of the proposed Orange parade of that period, and taking substantially the same ground as that on which the order of [illegible] was based.

All the dead bodies at the morgue, except one, were identified

The number killed thus far reported, is fifty-six—five additional deaths having occurred since Thursday night.

Mr. Greeley wrote an editorial in which the sentence 'Erin go Bragh,' occurred twice. One compositor set it 'Erin yes dough,' and another set it 'Indigo blue.' Horace was so mad he kicked himself down two pair of stairs.

The New Loan—Its Failure.

From the Washington Patriot, July 3.

No intelligence has been received at the treasury department tending to corroborate the cable telegram sent from London to New York, day before yesterday, to the effect that Judge Richardson had been perfectly successful in his negotiations for the new loan in Europe. On the contrary, whatever is known concerning the operations of the agent set abroad to place the bonds is any thing but encouraging. In the meantime, the numerous agents employed to sell the new bonds at home have only some $26,000,000 of them, and those disposed of are only of the highest class, and not a dollar of the 4½ and 4 per cent. bonds has yet been taken. Thus it will be seen that the entire amount of the new loan (which has been on the market several months) that has actually been disposed of is less than $70,000,000, and of that amount, at least $60,000,000 is in transfers by the national banks, so that the actual new subscriptions are under 01,000,000.

This is decidedly a bill showing for the refunding scheme of the administration; is, in fact, a practical demonstration of its utter failure. No doubt Mr. Boutwell has done his best; no doubt his agents have done their best to sell the new bonds, and to convince the people of the advantages they offer for a safe investment on long times; but it is notorious that the refunding scheme was passed so much in favor of the national banks as to paralyze the hands of the government from the outstart. It is also notorious that no bill which compelled the national banks to transfer the 6 per cents. for the lower rate bonds could have got through congress, in the face of the bank presidents and bank directors who hold seat in that body.

Now, there is another fact in relation to the failure of the new loan which demonstrates how zealous have been the efforts of the government to dispose of it, and that is the fact that the advertising bills already reach $90,000; and when to that amount is added the commissions of the agents, the aggregate is further augmented by a considerable figure. Then there should be added the heavy expense of the two costly embassies which have been sent to Europe to sell the bonds there, and which cannot be fairly estimated at much less than $50,000 in gold. In view of the discouraging facts above referred to, there would seem to be some foundation for the rumor which was current in this city yesterday, to the effect that Mr. Boutwell had ordered the note-printing companies in New York to suspend the printing of the new bonds until further orders.

Vallandigham and Lincoln.

Mr. Vallandigham was a distinguished lawyer, and as a politician rose to the dignity of a statesman. During the war his sympathies were warmly with the South, and so openly manifested, that for a while he suffered banishment beyond the Union lines.

The truth of history is probably seldom, if ever, fully written; but from information which we received about the time, we suspect that there was a much better understanding between Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Vallandigham than was generally suposed. The fact is that Arabaham Lincoln, as a party manager, had a degree of astuteness and cunning which was seldom suspected by the exterior of his homely manners and jocular style of conversation.

Banisher and banished—both died violent deaths, from pistol shot wounds and it may be remarked, as still another coincidence, that on the same day on which Mr. Vallandigham shot himself, Mr. Peterson, whose residence in Washington was made famous by President Lincoln being taken there after he was shot at Ford's Theater, was found in one of the public parks, of that city, in a dying condition, caused by an over dose of opium from which he soon afterward expired.

MEDICAL Science is reaching a high degree of perfection, and seems almost on the point of gaining a victory over death. It is related that the transfusion of blood as a remedy for impaired vitality was recently attempted with success in a Berlin hospital. The subject was a soldier on whom amputation had been performed, and who became so weak from the consequent loss of blood that his life was despaired of. As a last resource one of the attending physicians selected a healthy Bavarian and took from him the proper supply of blood, which, being freed from albumen by filtering, and raised to blood heat by artificial means, was injected into the veins of the dying soldier. He began at once to recover. If the transfer of blood from one person to another can be the effect of filling the veins of an old person with the blood drawn from one who is young and vigorous?

The New York Sun, has the following at its mast-head:

"For President—Farmers' and Mechanics' Candidate' the great and good Useful H. Greeley of Texas and New York."

The New York Herald says it is wonderful how veterans of 1812 are springing up since the Pension bill became a law. There is 26,000 men now on the rolls, and more coming in, at the rate of one hundred and seventy-six daily.

The Democrats of Arkansas, who had no regular organization since Governor Clayton's martial law in 1867, have appointed a State Committee, and propose to work vigorously in order to carry the State next year.

The population of Utah, it is said, has nearly doubled since the 1st of January last, in consequence of the discovery and development, in districts adjacent to Salt Lake, of rich silver quartz veins, some of which are yielding as high as $1,000 per ton.

A party of officers from Kokomo, overtook and captured near Winchester a few days ago, a man and woman who had stolen four horses, a wagon, a lot of Millinery goods and other articles, from the vicinity of the former place.

Andrew Jackson Donelson.

Andrew Jackson Donelson the adopted son of Andrew Jackson, died in Memphis June [illegible]th. He was a man of decided personal worth, and of more than ordinary attainments as [illegible] ability, though not by any means a great man. He would perhaps never have become known to fame but for his connection with the hero of New Orleans. As it was he figured but to a limited extent in public affairs, though he held several positions of importance under the Government. He was Charge d'Affaires to the Republic of Texas in 1844, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Prussia in 1846, and to the Federal Government of Germany in 1848. In 1856 he was on the ticket with Mr. Fillmore as the candidate of the American party for Vice President of the United States, for which office he received the electoral votes of the state of Maryland—eight in number—since which time he has not figured in public life. The telegraph is in error in the statement that he was subsequently minister to France. He was generally esteemed a good man by those who knew him best.

The following has been added to the 'Palace Car Resolutions,' since we published them by the higly accomplished sage of Eggnier, who enjoys a joke with the same gusto, that a man would naturally indulge in after reading Horace Greeley's "What I know about farming." He always was that way.

Resolved, That we indignantly refute the insinuation of the chief cook of dining car "Brevoort;" that the great and prosperous State of Iowa, with her vast corn fields and inexhaustible granaries, is unable to maintain a sufficient number of yellow legged "critters" to appease the appetite of Tom Mays, and that we deem such "fowl" innuendos ample cause for permanently excluding the aforsaid "chief cook" from the benefits of the "new departure" so magnanimously embraced by the distinguished statesman of Auburn.

The State Fair.

The Nineteenth Indiana State Fair will be held at Indianapolis, commencing the 2d day of October, and lasting during the week. The premium list which is being distributed throughout the State is large and liberal. The premiums on horses range from $10 to $300, and on hogs, cattle and other live stock in the same proportion. Farm products, too come in for proper recognition. The best acre of wheat, red or white, $30 each. Best acre of oats, timothy or potatoes, $25 each, with many other liberal premiums in this department of industry. Liberal premiums are also offered in farm implements and machinery, the fine arts, the miscellaneous and other departments.

We were shown by G. C. Glatte a singular freak of nature consisting of a potato which had lain in his cellar all summer, and from the inside of which are growing several new potatoes—they having burst open the old one and are protruding through the opening. The potato has never sprouted, but the formation of new potatoes commenced on the inside and worked their way out. It is a great curiosity. It is proposed to send it to Horace Greeley, and obtain his opinion as to what he knows about farming.—Kendallville Standard.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?—One of our editorial excursionists turned the PASSETT and, being a GREEN hand, that indiscretion caused him to get on a BENDER, and to see a MANWARRING against a woman.—Another one took a game of BALL, although he says he never could BAIT to HUNTER fish. While our BAKER never got hungry, and our TAYLOR wanted not for some handsome duds, the MASON part of the company, thought it perfect BLISS to look at the morning STARR (thro' the bottom of a glass), while the YEOMAN-ry shouted, WATTS the matter, honey? and threw BEANS at each other while singing Pat Molloy and the CAMPBELLS are coming down. The President looked upon the scene with STOLL-id indifference, and we INGRIM silence and a-MATS-ment, regretted our inability THOMAS-ter the dire confusion that HASCALL-ed out this personal paragraph.—You know how it is yourself.—Wauseon Democrat.

A Child Gored by a Cow and Death Ensues.

We have often spoken of the great danger in allowing cattle to run at large in the streets of our town, and have urged the law makers and executors to take some steps to abate the nuisance. No attention has been paid to it, and we have the painful duty of recording a death caused by cattle being allowed so much freedom. Some three weeks since one of Mr. A. Young's children, who lives in the north part town, aged about 9 years, was set upon by a vicious cow, badly gored, and thrown several feet in the air, inflicting injuries from which the child died on Tuesday last. This cow has been known for years, we learn, to be a dangerous animal, but has been permitted to run at large. If we have a law against cattle running unattended in the streets why is it not enforced? If there is no law governing such cases it is high time one is enacted.—Wabash Enterprise.

HAVING a buyer in New York all the time buying goods for cash only, the Red Front Clothing House can substantiate all it advertises and sells good cheaper than other houses can buy them for.

THE Mishawaka Enterprise says that a little three year old boy had crawled into the standing wheat, on his father's farm, and had fallen asleep. He was not discovered by the harvesters until he had been struck by the reaper and terribly [illegible].

THE LATEST EDITION.—An eight pounder, to the wife of our popular druggist, F. E. Davenport, Esq. The Doctor expects an increased trade in Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and is chuckling over the prospect. From what he says, he's been son-struck quite extensively, but hopes are entertained of his recovery. You know how it is yourself.

ICE CREAM.—Who is it but what can relish a good dish of ice cream this hot weather. How deliciously it goes down without an effort, to the place where all good things are consigned. It makes one feel so comfortable and happy. It was ever thus in childhood's hour. Albright takes the lead in getting up a good article, and those visiting his rooms opposite the Court House will enjoy a treat in this way of unusual attraction. Give him [illegible] Smith charged with assault and battery on the person of Mrs. Bohler, an insane woman at Waterloo, and who was afterwards committed to jail in default of bail, was taken out last Tuesday on a writ of habeas corpus, and tried before Judge Clapp at the [illegible] place. The trial did not develope the necessary evidence for his conviction and he was discharged.

[illegible] was the [illegible] the year [illegible] farmers [illegible] were engaged in harvesting, and securing their wheat. As far as we can learn, the wheat crop of this year will be a bountiful one, and crops of all kinds are good, all over the land, and it is now almost "after harvest," the time the farmers [illegible] their years labor.

NEW CHEESE.—Our clever friend, Mr. Jacob Stamets, furnished our table with a very fine palatable acrticle of cheese, manufactured at his dairy, south of town It is equal to the great brands of Western Reserve manufacture, and we can warrant it pure and good. We are glad to learn that he is meeting with great success, and that the demand is far a head of the supply. May it ever be thusly, Jacob, and as long as you make as good an article as the "quarter" now before us, for which you will please accept thanks, we know every body will want it, as they can appreciate a good thing.

ITEMS.—Now would be a good time for a good item, as the woman has got down her snake, now, after seventeen years' suffering, and he is recuperating for renewed efforts. The serpent is sleeping off the effects of an over-feed of potato-bugs. The revolutionary hero is preparing to saw a card of wood, as the weather is too hot for him to walk to the polls and vote for every President since Washington. The country milliner is waiting for her next uncle to die and leave her $6,000,000. There is a clear field now for the circus band to fall into the lion's den, or for the Bengal tiger to take a free lunch off the Bactrian dromedary. Or, if the worst comes to the worst, Mr. Colfax can recover steadily, or Dr. Livingstone can die again.

JOSH BILLINGS says that one live man in a village is like a case ov itch at a district skool—he sets everybody a scratching at onst."

A small dose of that kind of itch would not hurt in this place. There is plenty of room here for more business men and business enterprise, and we would like to see it filled up as rapidly as possible. Manufactories of different kinds would do well here, especially those requring good timber We have this article in abundance all over the county, and if it is not manufactured at home, it will be shipped in the bulk, thus losing one half the revenue we might realize therefrom.

PERSONAL.—Hon. J. S. Collins, President, and Major Thiel, chief engineer of the Eel River Railroad, were in towd this week. They report the track-laying and grading progressing finely.

—The friends of Spencer Dills, formerly School Examiner and principal of the Auburn High School, will be pleased to learn that in addition to the A. M. degree formerly received, has recently had that of M. D. conferred by the medical department of the Michigan University at Ann Arbor.

—Prof. C. P. Hodge, formerly an attorney of this place, but now the principal of a flourishing High School at Pierceton, is with his family visiting his mother-in-law, Mrs. Judge Matt.

I met her in the sun set bright
Her gingham dress in blue,
Her eyes, that danced with pure delight,
Was of that same dear hue,
And in her side pocket to cure the chills
She carried a box of Davenport's pills,
And every night as the sun goes down,
I think of the girl with the gingham gound

Auburn Academy.

We are glad to learn that this institution is to be opened under favorable auspices, next month, and that a large attendance from abroad is anticipated.—There is nothing that adds more to a place than a thorough prosperous school, and looked at in a business point of view, it is one of the best enterprises that can be entered into by the citizens of any place. With rather a good school building and a pleasant location, we doubt not but that many young persons from different parts of the county will be induced to attend, especially when they learn that Prof. McIntosh, late County School Examiner, is to superintend. Mr. M. has every requisite to bring the school up to a high degree of success, and efficiency, and we trust he will be ably seconded by our citizens. To have a good school it is necessary that our citizens show some interest in the matter, and we hope there will be a waking up in the subject and a zeal and interest taken in this great cause. The fall term will open August 14th. Mr. M. has secured an efficient corps of assistants, and we look for a work during the coming winter that shall accomplish more good than has ever been attained before in the same time.

AUBURN BUSINESS DIRECTORY.—An arrangement is being entered into by Col. R. D. King, of Fort Wayne, by which the citizens of this place will be furnished with a complete directory of the business and residents of Auburn, without the usually large expense attendant under other circumstances. Mr. King proposes to connect it with the large Directory which he is preparing for Fort Wayne, thus giving our citizens a valuable book containing a perfect and reliable list all inhabitants over eighteen years of age, their places of business, residences, etc. Street Directory, Societies, City and County officers etc., of Fort Wayne, Auburn, Columbia City, Huntington, Monroeville, Kendallville, Bluffton, Decatur and New Haven.—This volume, when completed and delivered, will cost two dollars, and it is hoped that everybody will take a copy. Our business men can have advertisements inserted at reasonable rates Mr. King will visit our citizens in person, in a few days, for this purpose, as he never depends on assistants, but does the work himself, and is sure to have it correct.

HARPER'S MONTHLY for August is before us brim-full of excellent reading matter, at once repete with information and amusement. A copy of this valuable magazine should be taken in every family.

OUR friend Captain Morlan is short a $50 bill, either lost or stolen, don't know [illegible] blame it on the Ku Klux. Capt.

A private letter received from Hon. W. G. Holgate, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Defiance line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, [illegible] states the corps of engineers are now near the west line of the State, that the route is in every respect all that its most sanguine supporters could ask, save a slight [illegible] in circumventing and leaving Albion. It is also reported [illegible] that the [illegible] will be made to bring the line within half a mile of Newville. In concluding his letter he says: "We have everything to encourage us, and nothing to discourage." Also "that we are sure of the game."

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—An old German named John E[illegible] met with a serious accident while approaching town with a load of lumber. When opposite Grog's residence, north of town, the horses started up rather lively, seeming anxious to get home. In checking them up, some of the lumber was jostled against them, when they started, Mr. E. falling off so that the front wheel passed over his right leg between the knee and ankle, crushing the bone terribly. Drs. Carabeer and Spooner attended to the fracture, but, as the patient is sixty years old, it is feared that amputation will be necessary. The team was recovered without further damage.

CHEESE MANUFACTORY.—I am now manufacturing cheese for the trade, and have on hand a large lot, which I warrant good, not made of skimmed milk. My cows are fed on tame grass, clover and timothy, and fresh pure water—no stagnant swamp water on the farm. I use Roe's patent premium cheese vat with improved heater, the best in the world, also Roe's improved lever and weight cheese press, patent expansion hoops, &c. I am now selling at 12 and 14 cents per pound. Dairy one-fourth mile south of Auburn, on the Fort Wayne road. J. STAMETS.

July 20-3m.

STATE CENTER, Iowa, July 12th, 1871.

MR. EDITOR.—After an absence of a little more than four months, I might write something about this western country that would be of interest to my friends, back in old DeKalb. If I remember right I left your town the last day of February, 1871, for Rochelle, Ill., where I spent nearly three months a canvassing mostly in Ogle, Lee and DeKalb County, which are filled with energetic go-a-head farmers, and my observations are that they will be crowned with success in most of their efforts. As far as my knowledge goes the Colorado potato bugs are their only draw back. Their potato crop will be nearly a failure in Illinois, and damaged to some extent in this State. Times are rather dull and money is scarce I don't think that wheat will be an average crop this year, but of a superior quality. We have never had a better prospect for corn where it has not been injured by the numerous hailstorms which have traversed the State this Season. On July 1st, a hailstorm passed two miles north of this place, which proved very destructive, some of the hailstones measuring 7 inches in circumference, and could be found in the gullies sloughs on the 4th several days after. We are in the garden of the west. If I could exhibit one acre of corn at Auburn I would take in more half dollars than Sheldenbergers circus realized. The climate is healthy and physicians have very little to do. If any doctor proposes to go west I would advise him to change professions, for this part of the country, as physicians and saloon keepers don't thrive here. This place is 14 miles west of Marshaltown, in Marshal county, and contains 700 inhabitants. Old DeKalb is represented by Daniel Zwilling, in the dry goods interest, and Philo Lockwood as attorney at Law. Real estate high wild lands selling $10 to $20 per acre, and improved as high as $50.

R. LOCKWOOD.

IT seems only a little while since, on the 22d of April, the planet Mercury reached its greatest elongation, and was distinctly seen in the western sky, as a brilliant evening star. The swift little planet has not been idle, but has since traveled more than a hundred million miles in its orbit, and having reached its greatest western elongation on the opposite side of the sun, was this morning shining bright ly as a morning star, about two hours before sunrise.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK, one of the very best magazines now published, is already issued for August. We cannot see how any lady can do without it, containing as it does, so many things of great interest to the fair sex. Get a number and see how it is yourself.

IT is the fashionable thing now to eliminate undesirable persons from your family with arsenic. When this is not attainable, a dinner-plate administered on the temple will do.

WE call the attention of the public to the large enterprise of the Fort Wayne merchants. It is now one year since the Red Front Clothing House, in No. 5 Keystone Block, opened with finest and largest stock ever opened in that city, which they gained by their fair and honorable dealing and are at the present deriving almost the entire trade in their line in that city. Reason shows fair dealings to all. They sell goods at retail and wholesale prices. They have three stores in different places, which makes their business extensive so as to keep a buyer in New York all the time.—Every dollars worth of goods brought by their stores which enable them to sell twenty per cent. lower than any other house, which of itself as a large profit they sell goods at such low prices that the oldest established houses, of the city are laying idle while their stores are crowded daily by customers.

June 29, '71,

A Troy editor lately returned a tailor's bill with the following memorandum on the margin:

'Your manuscript is respectfully declined.'

THE editor of the Fort Wayne Journal interprets the mark "P. X." on some of its exchanges as a desire on the part of their publishers to "please exchange." He little dreams that these editors are poking fun at the Journal, and that the "P. X." means that that paper is a Poor Xouse.—Indianian.

We presume Tom will answer this next week.

The National Publishing Co., of Cincinnati, has [illegible] history of the [illegible] Germany and France, from the pen of one of our most popular writers, Mr. James D. McCabe, Jr.

In a large volume of 800 octavo pages, the author tells a wonderful story—all the stranger because of its truth. He tells of battles which have shaken Europe to its centre, and the consequences of which upon we in military skill and statesmanship never surpassed in history. The author writes with the weight and force of truth and the great merits of his book are its reliability and st[illegible]. The book is co[illegible] war. It describes [illegible] and the events which preceded it; the opening campaign, and the first reverses of the French; the effect of these reverses upon the French people; the frantic effort to rescue the beaten army, and the terrible disaster of Sedan; the capture of the Emperor Napoleon, and an entire army; the Revolution in Paris; the rise and for[illegible] the [illegible] of the E[illegible] surr[illegible] fortresses of France; the triumphal of the German armies to Paris; the efforts of Bazaine to escape from Metz, and the final surrender of his army; the investment and siege of Paris; the detailed history of this siege; its plans, sorties, battles, successes and failures; the course of events in the beleagured city, given in the form of a full diary of the events of the siege; the campaigns on the Loire, and in other portions of France; the peace negotiations, the surrender of Paris, and the treaty; the naval history of the war; the diplomatic history on both the German and French sides; the history of the formation of the great German Empire; the proclaiming of King William Emperor, and the realization of Germany's unity; the events of the civil war and second siege of Paris, its terrible scenes of bloodshed and vandalism, with a minuteness, graphicness and brilliancy, which leaves nothing to be desired. No intelligent person can afford to be unacquainted with these events which have left so deep an impression on the world's history, and few will fail to read this splendid work; or, having read it, to endorse it as the Standard American History of the War.

In this age of sensational literature, we cannot too highly commend this brilliant and thoughtful narrative to our readers. The book is handsomely bound, and illustrated with 150 maps, portraits, battle scenes, and views of the principal localities connected with the war. No expense has been spared by the publishers to make it worthy of the support of the public, and we predict for it an immense sale, especially as its low price brings it within the reach of all. It is published in both English and German, sold by subscription only, and the publishers want agents in every county.

ALL the clothing men are crying clothing is going up since the advance in war, but the popular Red Front Clothing House are selling goods cheaper than ever. We purchased our winter goods in May when they were very low, and will give our customers the advantage. Come and see us at No. 5 Keystone Block, Fort Wayne.

BURLINGTON.

Leaving the East and arriving at Chicago or Indianapolis, how shall we reach the West? The best Line is acknowledged to be the C., B. & Q., joined together with the Iron Bridge at Burlington, and called the BURLINGTON ROUTE.

The main line of the route running to Omaha connects with the great Pacific Roads, and forms to-day the leading route to California. The Middle Branch, entering Nebraska at Plattsmouth, passes through Lincoln, the State Capital, and will this year be finished to Fort Kearney, forming the shortest route across the Continent by over 100 miles.

Another branch of the B. M., diverging at Red Oak, falls into a line running down the Missouri through St. Joe to Kansas City, and all Kansas. Passengers by this route to Kansas, see Illinois, Southern Iowa, and Missouri, and by a slight divergence, can see Nebraska also.

Lovers of fine views should remember the Burlington Route, for its towns "high-gleaming from afar"—its tree-fringed streams—its rough bluffs and quarries—its corn-oceans stretching over the prairies farther than eye can reach.

Land-buyers will be sure to remember it, for they have friends among the two thousand who have already bought farms from Geo. S. Harris, the Land Commissioner of the B. & M. R. R. at Burlington, Iowa, or among the four thousand home-steaders and pre-emptors who last year filed claims in the Lincoln land office, where "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm."

FACT.—The eclipse of the moon did not come to time, and a great many people were consequently disappointed; but those who go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport expecting to get a bargain are never disappointed; for he is just now giving such bargains as will satisfy any reasonable man.

Seven Years a Prisoner of the Black-Feet Indians—A Horrible History.

On Tuesday last a French boy named Bouillon Wood, made prisoner by the Blackfeet at the St. Cloud massacre, in 1864, [illegible] Mich., [illegible] his [illegible] Haven. At this point he gained the first intelligence of his relatives. He tells the following story, and from a rigid cross examination, and the fact that it is the true story of St. Cloud, and his being able to minutely describe his uncle, there can be no doubt of his honesty. The red skins attacked his father's family and killed all besides himself and a younger sister. His father, Peter Wood was scalped and tomahawked. His mother was ripped open alive, her entrails taken out, and [illegible] torn from her arms and [illegible] fence. His two sisters, aged respectively 20 and 21, were nailed by their [illegible] fast to the wall, scalped, and [illegible]. Bouillon, then about 12 years old, was compelled to witness the [illegible] of his mother, and fainted at the sight. On recovering, he found [illegible] sister captives. The Blackfeet carried them to [illegible] Mountains, and on arriving cut off with a tomahawk [illegible] of the boy and with a knife cut the girl's ears nearly off, [illegible] they did to mark their captives. The boy was also [illegible] dren were separated and have never met since. He remained under close surveillance until the time of his escape [illegible] before [illegible] they abused him dreadfully, but after he acquired that to some extent they treated him better. The medicine men tried hard to cure his [illegible] and the boy suffered [illegible] sore until his escape. About one year ago, while the camp [illegible] he made his escape, traveling along without a gun or means of securing game, and subsisting on herbs, roots, and Indian potatoes, until he struck the first white settlement, Pike's Peak. Here he was cared for and his arm reampu[illegible] who [illegible] his life [illegible] tion. He made his way by slow stages mostly on foot, to this point, passing railroads [illegible] charge of by Mr. Charles Pagget, who ascertained the truth of his story, [illegible] of Senator Ferry will be brought to his case, and he will be glad to make an effort to have his little sister sought for by the Government. [illegible] Butter.

The proper salting of butter requires [illegible] as to reach any remaining particles of either casein or moisture. All [illegible] practical directions given by the [illegible] factures are followed [illegible] this country require for flavoring about one ounce [illegible] to a pound [illegible] fastidious about the quantity, prefer about one-half as much, and [illegible] removed. It need hardly be stated that the salt [illegible] It must be perfectly white, must dissolve completely in water to a clear liquid, untroubled by any turbidity, without froth or sediment, must be absolutely [illegible] taste, [illegible] moder[illegible] room must remain free from perceptible moisture [illegible] than salt is required for the preservation [illegible] stances.

The Seventeen Year Locusts.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO of Bridgeport, Conn. adapt[illegible] to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk. Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

VINEGAR BITTERS

J. WALKER, Proprietor. R. H. McDONALD & Co., Druggists & Gen. Agents, San Francisco, Cal., and 34 Commerce street, N. Y.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, [illegible] Pain in the Shoulders, [illegible] Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Sunstroke.

This is a sudden prostration due to long exposure to great heat, especially when one is much fatigued and exhausted. It commonly happens from undue exposure to the sun's rays in summer, but I have seen the same effects produced on a baker from the great heat of the baker [illegible]. It begins with a pain in the head or dizziness, quickly followed by a loss of consciousness and complete prostration. Sometimes, however, the attack is as sudden as a stroke of apoplexy. The head is often burning hot, the face dark and swollen, the breathing labored and snoring; and the extremities cold. Take the person at once to a cool and shady place, but don't carry him too far to a house or hospital. Loosen the clothes thoroughly about his neck and waist. Lay him down with the head a little raised. Apply wet clothes to the head, and mustard or [illegible] to the calves of the legs and soles of the feet. Give a little whisky and water if he can swallow. Meanwhile let some one go for the doctor. You can not safely do more than I have said without his advice.

THE whole length of all the railways in the world is 120,000 miles.—The cost of the same was in the round numbers, ten billions of dollars. Those of Great Britian are the most costly, and those of the United States the least so. The railway sytem of the world is supposed to give employment to over one million person.

THE BOY AND THE BROOK.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Down from yon distant mountain height
The brooklet flows through the village street
A boy comes forth to wash his hands,
Washing, yes washing, there he stands,
In the water cool and sweet.

"Brook, from what mountain dost thou come?
O my brooklet cool and sweet!"
"I come from yon mountain high and cold,
Where lieth the new snow on the old,
And melts in the summer heat."

"Brook, to what river dost thou go?
Oh my brooklet cool and sweet!"
"I go to the river there below
Where in bunches the violets grow
And sun and shadow meet."

"Brook, to what garden dost thou go?
Oh my brooklet cool and sweet!"
"I go to that garden in the vale
Where all night long the nightingale
Her love song doth repeat."

"Brook, to what fountain dost thou go?
O my brooklet cool and sweet!"
"I go that fountain at whose brink
The maid that loves thee comes to drink,
And, whenever she looks therein,
I rise to meet her, and kiss her chin,
And my joy is then complete."

THE MAD STONE.

Is There Any Virtue in It?—Thrilling Account of its Effects.

In the fall of 1865, myself and family (consisting of my wife and one child—a little girl three years old), moved West, and lived that winter in the house of one Reed, in the town of Marion, Lynn county Iowa. Early in the April following, we moved into Otter Creek township, twelve miles north of Marion, and in the same county, upon the open prairie, near what is known as Long Grove, and within a few minutes' walk the following persons, either of whom can be referred to in vindication of my statements: Charles Hoffman, J. Lanning, Fleming, Lyman, McMillch, (have forgotten the given names of the last three), and a score of others all honorable men.

In the month of June I framed a small house, which was erected soon after, near the cabin I then lived in. As I finished my timber, I packed it up, laying it upon small, round sticks to keep it from the ground. A few days after, as sat in my cabin reading, and my little girl playing out of doors, I heard her scream from the pile of timber. As soon as I saw her, which could not have been more than three seconds, she sat down, and drawing her knees up to her chin, cried piteously, 'Oh, papa! papa! My stomach! my stomach!" As quick as a man can tell it, I took her in my arms and laid her upon the bed, when she immediately commenced vomiting. Upon interrogating her, as soon as she could speak, she said something bit her toe. She being barefooted, I saw upon the joint of the great toe of the left foot, a little red spot, looking something like the sting of a bee. I went out and looked about to find what I feared, and hoped not to find a rattlesnake; but not finding anything, I went to take the second look. Imagine, if you are a parent, my feelings when I saw a little purple ring around the the wound, about one third as large as a small shirt button. It was small, I know, but I read in it, in flaming capitals—Death; for I knew that the chances for a grown person, away, as I was, from medical aid, were very small; how much less for a child in delicate health, only three years old! I felt sure that death alone could receive her. I quickly went out again to look in the only place which I did not before, under the timber. I took a stick, with which I commenced to punch under the timber. If I had any hopes before they utterly left me now, as I produced a large rattlesnake nearly three feet long. I saw it all. She had been shelling corn into one of the mortices, and standing close by the timber, her toes went under, and disturbed his snakeship.

This was about three o'clock, p. m. As fast as I could run, I alarmed my neighbors, who came promptly, and the next two hours everything was done that experience of years in border life could suggest under the circumstances (there was not one drop of whisky in the neighborhood), yet slowly and surely ring after ring made its appearance, about half an inch apart. Six o'clock came, and the rings had reached her knee. What should I do? What could I do? My little one was going, fading, still failing. 'Can we do more?' I asked, when Mr. Hoffman said, 'Nothing, unless we take her to the Mad Stone.'

'Mad Stone!' said I, in surprise, 'what is that?'

He told me in a few words; said it would certainly cure if we could get her there in season—it being ten miles and over a bad road. Said I, 'Hitch up your horses quick!' and we were soon under way. It was near ten o'clock when we arrived at the house of Turner Evans, the man who owns that precious pebble, or one of them. About seven o'clock the rings reached her body, the swelling all the time keeping pace with the rings. At eight o'clock she went to sleep—or into a state resembling it—with her eyes set, and I feared never to wake again, here.

On entering the house of Evans he told us to give ourselves no uneasiness, for if she had but one more breath to draw he could save her. He then produced the magic stone. I must profess it look like a small thing upon which the life of my child depended. It was about one-half inch long by one-sixth of an inch wide and deep, as near as I can recollect, of the color of soapstone, and porous, the pores being very small, yet discernible to the naked eye. He then took a saucer of milk and hot water, half and half, into which he put the stone, he said, to cleanse it. He then scratched the skin a little below the knee with a pin, enough to start the blood, (she did not feel it—she was beyond that); then taking the stone from the milk and water, he put it on the scratch, to which it clung like two magnets, sucking the poison from her system. You could see its pores fill, with the naked eye. As soon as it became full, it would drop off into the milk and water, which he held for that purpose, cleansing itself almost as soon as it touched the liquid. He would place it again upon the scratch, to which it would adhere, and from which it would again fall as soon as full, which operation took about one minute.

Up to the time of the second application of the mad stone, the wound of the toe had remained as at first, a little red spot, except, of course, the purple rings, which now began to bleed profusely, the blood being black as black can be. In about an hour, her sense of feeling returned; at the end of two hours she spoke and called for water; at the end of four hours the stone refused to work, there being no more poison in her system for it to cling to, and she was pronounced safe. We returned home in the morning joyfully, [illegible] can imagine, for she that [illegible] alive again. I could have told this [illegible] much shorter, but have only [illegible] details that the most [illegible] not be faithless, but believing.

IRA WAKEFIELD.

Webster, Worchester Co., Mass.

A Thrilling Incident.

The world of fiction hardly contains a more thrilling chapter than an incident which marked the life of the late Rev. Mr. Lee, Presbyterian minister of the village of Waterford, New York.

Mr. Lee was sitting in his study about midnight, preparing a discourse to deliver to his congregation, when he heard a noise behind him, and became conscious that some one was in the room. Mr. Lee exclaimed, 'What's the matter?' and, turning around his chair, beheld the grim face of a burglar, who was pointing a pistol at his breast. The ruffin had entered the house by a side window, supposing all the occupants were asleep.

'Give me your watch and money,' said he, 'or I'll fire.

'You may put down weapon, for I shal make no resistance, and you are at liberty to take all the valuables that I possess,' was Mr. Lee's calm reply.

The burglar withdrew his menacing pistol, and Mr. Lee said:

'I will conduct you to the place where my most precious treasures are placed.

He opened the door and pointed to the cot where his two children lay slumbering in the sleep of innocence and peace.

'These,' said he, 'are my choicest jewels Will you take them?'

He proceeded to say that as a minister of the Gospel he had few earthly possessions, and that his means were devoted to but one object—the education of the two motherless children. The burglar was deeply and visibly affected by these remarks. Tears filled his eyes, and he expressed the utmost sorrow at the act he was about to commit.

After a few remarks by Mr. Lee, the would-be criminal consented to kneel and join in prayer; and there in that lonely house, amid the silence of midnight, the offender poured forth his remorse and penitence, which the representative of religion, of peace and good will, told him to 'go and sin no more.'

Such a scene has few parallels.

THE following is a composition by a specimen of Young America, and shows the bent of the juvenile race:

THE EDITOR.

The editor is one of the happiest animals in the know world. He can go to the circus, afternoon and evening, without paying a cent; also to inquests and hangings He has a free pass to pic-nics and strawberry festivals, gets wedding cake sent him, and sometimes gets a licking, but not often, for he can take things back the next issue, which he generally does. I never knew but one editor to get licked. His paper busted that day, and he could at take nathing back.

"While other folks have to go to bed early, the editor can sit up late every night and see all that's going on. The boys think it is a big thing to stay out till ten o'clock. When I am a man I mean to be an editor, so I can stay out nights.—Then that will be "bully." The editor don't have to saw wood or do any chopping, except with the scissors. Railroads get up excursions for him, knowing if they did'nt he'd make 'em get up and git. In politics he don't care much who he goes for if they are on his side. If they ain't he goes for 'em anyhow, so it amounts to nearly the same thing. There are a great many people trying to be editors who can't, and some of them have been in the profession for years. They can't see it through. If I was asked if I'd have a education or be a circus rider, I would say let me go and be a editor.

A Conductor Outwitted by a Boy.

A few days ago, a young lad under 12 years of age, an itinerant glass merchant, was traveling in a Broadway and University-palace car, when the conductor demanded additional fare for a small basket which the lad had, containing small glass globes. The young merchant protestod against the demand and refused to pay it, when the conductor removed him from the car, leaving the basket inside. The lad disappeared, but remained not far away to see what would become of the basket and its contents. The conductor, on returning to the inside of the car, found that the basked had been left behind. He took it out, looked around for the lad, who was behind a corner watching him, and not seeing him left the basket on the sidewalk. A policeman was passing immediately after, and seeing no owner for the basket removed it to the Fifth Precinct Station. The lad was still watching, and, seeing his basket in safe keeping, started off for the depot and made a report of his expulsion by the conductor and demand his basket. The basket was not, of course, forthcoming, and the conductor's proceedings not having been approved of by his superiors, they directed him to pay to the young merchant the full value of his basket and goods. The youngster came away rejoicing, having realized a good profit and disposed of his goods without much trouble. The next day he called on Capt. [illegible] and in a most innocent manner demanded the basket and goods, but the Captain was not to be caught so easily, having learned from the conductor that he had paid for them. The Captain sent him off to settle the matter with the conductor, but it is probable that the lad will permit the latter to dispose of the basket and globes on his own account.

An exchange says: 'The worst joke that was ever perpetrated on scientific men took place recently at Louisiana, Mo. A man was sick with rheumatism, or something, and a fellow went around to the doctors and professors and things, and told them that it was the queerest case on record. He said the man had no feeling. You could stick pins in his body all over, and he paid no attention to them at all.—He was perfectly numb. So the doctors got together and called on the sick man to experiment. All arrived with pins and needles and bodkins. The man was asleep and they got around him, and each one stuck his pin in the patient. The sick man rolled over and looked at the crowd, and thought they had come to dissect him, so he took a chair in one hand and the bed-post in the other, and drove the crowd thence. They are around with their heads tied up, looking for the man who said that sick man had no feeling.'

The wife of Samuel Guy, of Baker Tp., Morgan county, dropped dead, while pursuing her daily avocations, Friday night. She was seventy years old, and was one of the earliest settlers of that county.

The total amount of internal revenue collected in this district, last year, amounts to only $4,000—not enough to pay the officers.—Laporte Argus.

A Warning.

The Chicago Tribune tells the Republicans warningly that "it is not the part of wisdom to laugh at the new departure." It reminds them that "three voters in each school district throughout the United States can charge the minority into a majority," and elect a democratic President in 1872; and it adds:

Hence, that which the republican party has to fear is to the point or points upon which the Democracy are seeking to make an issue, and not those upon which they are seeking to obliterate all former issues. These points, so far as they are matured, are pretty well stated in the Iowa platform, to which we have already referred. They are:

1. Opposition to congressional interference in the local affairs of the States.
2. Universal amnesty, as a complement of universal suffrage.
3. Opposition to the annexation of San Domingo.
4. Opposition to protective tariffs.
5. Payment of the public debt in greenbacks.
6. Opposition to the National Banking system.

Death of Tad Lincoln.

CHICAGO, July 15.—Thomas Lincoln the youngest son of Ex-President Abraham Lincoln, died this morning at he Clifton house, in this city, where he has been residing with his mother since their return from Europe. The illness which caused his death was of a pleurisy nature, the result of a cold taken shortly after arriving here. The disease finally assumed a dropsical form, and his physicians some days since relinquished nearly all hopes of his recovery. His remains have been removed to the house of his brother, Robert T. Lincoln, who [illegible], where the funeral services will be held after which they will be taken to Springfield for interment in Oakpidge cemetry, where his father is buried. The deceased was in his 19th year, and was a young man of great promise and the idol of his mother, who is overwhelmed with grief.

The Indianapolis Sentinel says: "A farmer was decapitated by a mowing machine which he was running on his premises, near Southport, last Tuesday afternoon. At the time of the accident he was examining some portion of the machine which had got out of gear, when the horses started suddenly causing the blades to revolve, one of them striking the man in the back of the neck, severing the head from the body as though guillontied. A youthful son of the deceased witnessed the terrible accident, and dumb with horror, grasped the head by the hair and run with it into his mother's presence."

A fasinating youth of Louisville was recently very badly "sold" by he matron of the Kentucky State Prison, in whose daughter he seemed to evince a very strong interest while traveling in a railroad-car. Thinking that the flirtation had continued long enough, she suddenly changed her seat to the side of the young man, and whispered in his ear. "Sir, you are a total stranger to me, but I feel it my duty to warn you of impending evil. That young lady is just out of the State Prison." A passenger got off at the next station.

THE CHALLENGED OFFICER.

BY WATER A. ROSE.

The following story was told to me by an officer belonging to one of H. B. M.'s regiments, stationed in the east, as we paced the deck of the Hydaspes, one fine night when on the passage from Calcutta to London. I present it to my readers in the words of the narrator, whose [illegible] long residence in tropical climes.

'When I first received my commission in the British army, I was gazetted to the —th regiment, then in India, and, as the P. and O. company did not exist in those days, I took passage via the Cape of Good Hope.

'In the due course of time I arrived at Madras and joined my regiment, in which I remained only three years, [illegible] at the expiration of that period, I [illegible] my lieutenancy, and exchanged into the —rd, which was stationed up the country.

'I [illegible] thoroughly used to it, [illegible] nothing so monotonous as an officer's life in an isolated locality in India. There routine in everything; in duty, in lounging, eating, smoking, sleeping, reading and billiard and card playing, and this is only varied, if by lucky chance, he happens to be in a district where pig-sticking, elephant or tiger hunting is obtainable. At times, too, especially when [illegible] are with the regiment—amateur theatricals are in favor, and occasionally 'a hop' is improvised, but the climate is so enervating that neither men or officers [illegible] that had been a considerable length of time in the country, felt very often disposed to exert themselves to provide amusement for their comrades.

The —rd had been six years in India, and in consequence, all the members of that corps had become afflicted with lassitude that had almost become chronic. There was a great dearth of female society—that sine qua non of pleasurable existence—and the hunting had been pronounced by those old stagers, who considered themselves genuine shikarries, to be infernally bad; therefore, when it was announced that a new collector had been appointed to succeed the liverless old curmudgeon who, for seventeen years had held office in that district, and a nota bene was added, asserting that he was the fortunate possessor of an extremely beautiful wife, every one was on the qui vive to receive him. Much to our disappointment, however, he arrived alone, having left his spouse to enjoy the society of her friends in Calcutta for a few weeks, after which she was to follow him with her only child.

'Mr. Norman Fraser was a man about thirty-five years of age, tall, muscular and pre-eminently handsome; moreover, he was highly educated, any possessed such power of pleasing that he had won his way to all our hearts, and soon became a general favorite.

'He infused new life into our little coterie, and many were the lamentations whenever his genial countenance did not beam across our mess table. Our Colonel's two hard featured daughters—regular 'garrison girls,' who had flirted successively with every sub whom they had met during the last ten years—where enchanted by him, and openly lamented that he was already a Benedict, for though he was only a civilian, they would have been glad enough to have had the ghost of a chance to ensnare him in the silken meshes of matrimony.

'It was a custom in those days for officers to remain over the mess table long after the cloth had been removed, and unless a man possessed a strong head he was pretty certain to retire to rest in a lamentably befogged condition. One night, when we had all been indulging pretty freely, the conversation turned to billiards—an interesting topic for most of use were good players.

'Have you seen Fraser play? He beat Webb easily to-day, and I'll back him against any man in the regiment,' said Captain Raper, who considered himself an authority on matters connected with games of skill.

'I always give Webb points, and I wont shrink from measuring cues with a collector, though he certainly plays a very good game,' I replied.

'Fraser, old fellow, Lieutenant Holyrood thinks that he is your equal at billiards. Will you let me back you for a game?' Raper cried across the table.

'The collector, who was half 'seas over,' promptly expressed his willingness at once to engage with me, so I registered a hundred rupees with Captain Raper, and we adjourned to the billiard room. I had practiced a great deal in my leisure hours, and knew myself to be a steady player, and from what I had seen of Fraser's play I judged that he became nervous and irritable if luck went against him ever so little; therefore, I did not hesitate to accept a few other bets offered by admirers of my opponent's billiard style.

'We had got about half way through the game, and our scores were nearly equal, when I made two or three most palpable flukes in one break, and this so annoyed my semi-inebriated antagonist that he played wildly, missing most easy shots, and all the while denouncing my style of execution in no very measured terms. When sober he was the most courteous and urbane of men; but when excited by wine he was inclined to be insolent and overbearing.

'I was more than thirty points ahead, when a shot presented itself to me that was very difficult of accomplishment. It was a straight cannon, but in order to make it the object ball had to be very finely grazed indeed. My ball scarcely moved the object ball, though it undoubtedly touched it, and went on the [illegible]. A dispute instantly arose when I claimed the shot.

'You never hit the ball, sir,' cried Farser, loudly.

'I know I did not; but my ball did,' I replied, carelessly.

'It's false! [illegible]

'Do you insinuate [illegible]

'[illegible]

'Human nature could not stand that. I slapped my traducer's face. My brother officers interfered, and when my temper cooled I found myself walking on the verandah with my intimate friend, Ned Howson. [illegible]

'About ten o'clock Captain Raper came to my quarters. He took a [illegible] 'peg' before he explained his mission. As I expected, he was the bearer of a card from Mr. Fraser.

'This is a devilish unpleasant business altogether, Holyrood, but I suppose you perceive that there is no alternative. Will you choose your friend, for I don't suppose you intend to apologize,' said the Captain, who bore the reputation of being a fire-eater.

'I told him I would leave everything in the hands of Lieutenant Howson, and he went to that gentleman to arrange the preliminaries. About midday my friends came to me, and told me that he had agreed with the second of Mr. Farser as to the place, time of the meeting, and weapons to the be used in forthcoming duel. He also hinted that if I had any letters to waste in case of accident, it would be as well to do them at once, he said he would call and accompany me to the rendezvous at dawn the next morning; and, when I thanked him and promised to prepare myself for slaughter, left to hunt up the doctor, leaving me reflect upon my position.

'Dueling was much in vogue at that period, but I had never been principal in an affair d'honneur, and I confess my feelings on this occassion were not pleasant ones.

'In the first place, I liked Mr. Fraser very much, and I knew full well that he would never have provoked me to strike him had he not been under the influence of liquor. But the blow had been given, and nothing could avert a hostile meeting, unless I accorded him an ample and abject apology—to do which would have required far more courage than to fight, for I should have been stigmatized as a coward, and completely ostracised by my brother officers.

'It was the rainy season, and tolerably cool, so when I had finished putting my house in order, as Howson had advised, I set out for a walk, thinking that exercise would steady my nerves, which were somewhat unstrung by the effects of the potations of the previous night.

'As I strolled leisurely upon my way, pondered upon my past life. I thought of how, barely four years before, I had set out from home full of zeal and ambition with the hope of winning name and fame in the profesion I had chosen, earnest in my heart, and now, before I had even fleshed my maiden sword, before I was even fairly launched upon my career, had placed myself in such a position that it was more than probable my hopes, my zeal, ambition, and my life would be cut down like a flower. I cursed the enemy man put in his mouth to steal away his brains. I thought of the happy home in fatherland that would be made desolate by my death. I thought of the loved ones who would mourn me, then my heart was filled with bitter anguish [illegible] not diverted [illegible] even if I was [illegible] felt it would be my hand that would plunge his widow into a sea of grief, and leave fatherless his innocent child.

'I was aroused from this better train of thought by the hollow thud of rapidly advancing hoofs, and, on looking up, I saw a lady, whose face was totally unfamiliar to me, vainly endeavoring to restrain a mettlesome horse she was riding. The first glance told me she was a skilled equestrian; the second that she was unacquainted with the locality, for she seemed evidently bent upon taking the fire out of her steed by urging him forward; and to go forward I know full well meant to rush headlong to destruction, for right in that direction lay, half concealed by bushes, a deep mullah, or water course, down which a torrent, swelled by the recent rains, rolled in rushing cataracts over the rock strewn bed.

'Turn, madam, turn for your life, there is danger ahead!' I cried, as I rushed toward the point for which she was heading.

'The lady turned her face and I saw it was as fair as angel's; her symmetrical figure showed to full advantage as she used her utmost efforts to curb in her horse, and her hair which had escaped from the ribbons that bound it, floated, a wave of gold, far in her wake. I was near enough to see the bloom of excitement fade from her cheeks when she heard warning—near enough to see that the barb was now beyond her control and that a catastrophe was inevitable.

'A swift runner, I started forward at full speed, and gained the brink of the mullah just in time to see the horse and it rider disappear from view in the [illegible]

For a few seconds I saw the animal struggle to the surface, and I knew that its rider had freed herself. There was little chance of saving her. I knew it would be almost madness to try to attempt it, but it flashed across my mind that it would be better to end a bold effort to rescue a fellow creature than to meet death at the hand of my friend of yesterday. I doffed my boots, my hat, coat, and plunged in the seething flood. The circling eddies bore me downward and upward, but I was [illegible] surface—[illegible] in time to grasp the trailing riding habit of the lady I essayed to save. I twined one arm around her dainty waist and threw her beauteous head, with its drooping flower of locks, upon my shoulder while the rushing foaming torrent bore us along over the rocks that bruised and tore our flesh, through deep whirling pools that strove to suck us under, and down steep cascades where the waters broke with hissing roar though they merrily gleamed and flashed in the crimson glow of the setting sun. Bruised and battered by the collision with the cruel rocks, the life breath well nigh stifled in my throat and my strength rapidly giving way, yet I clung tightly to the pretty stranger, then unconscious in my arms, fully resolved that grim death himself should not part us. Over another waterfall in the fast flowing flood carried us, and when we issued from the flying foam at its foot, to feebly float was all that I could do. My brain was in a whirl, all power to resist was fast leaving me, when they bore us under the dank at a place where the bushes reached to the water's edge. I grasped a root, but the swift stream tore me from my hold and I gave up hope.

'An instant afterward, however, I found myself caught in the bushes of a tree that had fallen partly across the mullah and to it I clung with mad desperation that love of life can alone give a man. I still held the lady, clasped her close to me though I feared she never more would breathe again. I was not one to relinquish the prize I had battled so for, so, using what little power I possessed, I pushed her up, and laid her on a well-forked branch ere I struggle to free myself.

'At this point the mullah's bank was low. As straightend myself, I saw to my exceeding joy, three horseman coming swiftly across the plateau. I hallooed loudly attracting their attention, and they rode down, when they recognized the perilous predicament I was in. My head was dizzy, and I was well nigh overcome with exhaustion; but I managed to retain my hold until I felt a pair of strong arms clutch me and bare me ashore—then I sank into a deep swoon.

'When my senses returned I discovered that I was lying on a couch in my own quarters, and by side was standing Lieutenant Howson. The other gentlemen were seated near the verandah with their backs towards me.

'Who was she, Ned? Is she dead?' I asked when I remembered what had happened.

'Ere my friend could reply, the two gentlemen I had noticed rose from their seats and came quickly towards where I was lying. I glanced upward and saw the collector bending over me.

'It was my wife, my brave fellow, and in a few days I hope she will be sufficiently recovered to thank you personally for having so gallantly rescued her from a terrible death. She only arrived yesterday morning, and was riding over to the Colonel's, with Captain Raper, Dr. Middleton and myself, when her horse bolted, and this accident occurred. As for that other matter between you and I, Holroyd, you may call me coward or whatever you choose, but I tell you plainly I will never raise my hand against you [illegible] debt of gratitude. For you nobly risked your own life in saving that of my own Bertha, and may God bless you for the gallant action you performed,' he said, and his fine, frank face gleamed, and his eyes glistened with tears as he gazed upon me.

'I tried to reply, but being terribly prostrated, a choking sensation stayed my utterance.

'Some weeks passed before I regained [illegible] Mrs. Fraser, who had not sustained such severe contusions as myself, nursed me so tenderly that I recovered my prestine vigor. Many years have gone since then, and Mrs. Fraser's locks are grayish now; but her daughter's have the golden hue her mother wore when first we met, and her face the same sweet expression. The dearest friend I have on earth is the man whose wife I saved, the man who challenged me to a duel that was never fought.

Once more.

Vice President Colfax once more assures the country that he does not intend to be a candidate for political honors but will retire to private life at the end of his present term. And all this with the sincerest gratitude to his Republican friends for their long continued triumph of their principles and their candidates. It will be a relief when Mr. Vice President gets through retiring from public life, for since he commenced on that line it has echoed as with a harp of a thousand strings. The truth is Schuyler has done a large political business on a very small capital, and doubtless no one feels more profoundly than he that he has many fold more honors than his merits deserved, and it is to be hoped he will be permitted to

And now comes Fred Douglass, following in the footsteeps of Mr. Colfax, and assuring us of his intention to retire from public life. Only one consolation is left. Fred doesn't threaten to engage in the manufactuse of anything.

Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, and Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indian, are mentioned by the Richmond (Virginia) Dispatch as the most desirable Democratic candidates for the Presidency.

The following is from the Napoleon (Ohio) Northwest: "The Republican papers are fixing up a Presidential ticket for the Democracy, and very generally agree that Chase should head the ticket. Won't they lend us Colfax for Vice-President, so that we may have an unsized paralytic ticket?"

Mr. Colfax has written to a friend and states in his letter his irrevocable intention to retire from public life at the close of his present term of office. "It is not," he says, "that I am undesirous of serving my country, but a large part of my fortune is invested in my manufactory at South Bend, and I desire to give my time and energies to supervising the more extensive production of my recently patented coagulated, cast-iron dentifrice for the hair."

The Democratic party is for a government for the people, and by the people, in which power goes through accredited representatives, who, responsible to the people for a proper discharge of the trust, are chosen to reflect public sentiment and enact laws in accordance therwith. The Radical party would organize a strong central government, that should wield a kingly power and send down its mandates to control the masses consolidated into one grand scheme, with States existing only in name.

The Radicals of Pennsylvania are far from being a harmonious party. The old feud between the adherents of Cameron and Curtin is breaking out in various places. In Philadelphia, the ticket which was set up by a corrupt ring, is openly repudiated by a majority of the party journals. And now comes the news that the old quarrel in Huntingdon between Senator Scott and a large element of his party is raging with more than its former bitterness. In all the squabbles of the Radicals there does not seem to be any principle involved. That is something the leaders of that organization known nothing about. They fight for the spoils of office, and for nothing more noble.

Distribution of Sinking Fund.

Hon. John C. Shoemaker, the present State Auditor, has been grossly misrepresented and abused because the sinking fund money has not been distributed according to the act of the Legislature, every person seeming to hold him alone responsible for the failure of the law. In order to put him right before the public we propose to give the facts and leave the people to decide how far Mr. Shoemaker is to blame. As the law when Mr. Shoemaker came into office, and as it still is he has the custody of the sinking funds by virtue of being State Auditor, and is under heavy bonds to the State for their safe keeping. At the last session of the Legislature an act was passed, that was approved and went in effect February 24, "to amend the sixth section of an act to provide for the custody and management of the notes, bonds and mortgages arising directly from loans heretofore made by the Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners," which reads as follows;

All moneys received by the Auditor under this act, or under any of the acts hereby continued in force, or belonging to the Sinking Fund, shall, whenever the same amounts to four thousand dollars or more, forthwith notify the Secretary and Treasurer of State, of the amount of said fund in his hands; and the said Auditor, Secretary, and Treasurer shall immediately proceed to distribute among the different counties of the State, in proportion to the number of inhabitants in such county according to the late census; and in making such distribution among the several counties, the said Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners shall notify the County Auditor of such county or counties as may be entitled to such distributive shares or parts, from time to time, of the amount so ready for distribution; and thereupon the said County Auditor shall draw his warrant in favor of his respective County Treasurer, on the Board of Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, for such sum or sums as he may have been notified is ready for distribution for such county; such Treasurer shall present the same to the Board of Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, who shall pay the same to such County Treasurer.

By this act the Auditor, Secretary and Treasurer of State were constituted a Board to make this distribution "according to the late census." Mr. Shoemaker had but one vote in three, and alone could neither control, hasten nor delay the distribution. As soon, however, as the census of the State could be obtained, the Board met and apportioned the funds to the different counties, according "to the number of inhabitants," Mr. Shoemaker having reported the amount on hand, that being the only act that he was directed or authorized by the law to do individually. Colonel Eddy, the Secretary of State, objected to the distribution upon the ground that the law was invalid, but when Mr. Shoemaker and Mr. Ryan voted to make the distribution, he acquiesced. The necessary blanks were prepared immediately, and as the law did not provide any mileage or pay for the county officers coming after the money, Mr. Shoemaker made arrangements to send it to them free of cost, as the following copy of his letter to the Treasurers of the counties will show:

STATE OF INDIANA,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR OF STATE,
INDIANAPOLIS, March 17, 1871.

Treasurer of——County:

Your Auditor has this day been notified that of the Sinking Fund now on hand for distribution, under the provisions of an act approved February 24, 1871, the sum of——dollars and——is due your county, for which you will receive your Auditor's warrant.

As neither this act, or the "Fee and Salary bill," provides any compensation to County Treasurers, for mileage in traveling to obtain this money or in bringing up State Revenue, we have made arrangements, of which you can avail yourself if desirable, namely: On the receipt of your Auditor's warrant, with your letter of advice, we will pay such amount as you may direct into the State Treasury to your credit, on account of State Revenue, and send you the Auditor's quietus, with draft on this city, Cincinnati, Louisville or Chicago for the balance; or will send draft for whole amount if desired.

J. C. SHOEMAKER,
Auditor of State.

When the Board of Commissioners had proceeded thus far an injuction was obtained to prevent the distribution, not against him, Colonel Shoemaker alone, but against him, Colonel Eddy and Mr. Ryan. The injuction was made prepetual by the Court below and if, as charged by some, Mr. Shoemaker was a voluntary party to these proceedings why didn't he rest here? What motive could he have for appealing the case to the Supreme Court except a desire to carry out the will of the Legislature? The Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners, including Mr. Shoemaker, have done everything they could do legally to have the money distributed. As the Auditor is under bond for the safe keeping of the funds we imagine no one will ask him to distribute them without warrant of law. He has not loaned any part of them and does not propose to loan any, but will keep them intact subject to the order of Court or to be disposed of by the Legislature.

Some man down south named Davis was recently caught in a sleeping bunk with a lady not his wife, while riding in the cars, and a cruel wag hearing it, started the report that it was Jeff. Davis, formely of Richmond, and the papers all over the country are going for him hot and heavy. Poor old Jeff, it seems a shame to tell such a story on a man of his age.

RADICAL officials have been defaulters to the fabulous sum of twenty millions, and yet the party claims to be one of the retrenchment and reform; always declaring in its platforms for the most rigid economy. Mr. Boutwell, in his official report, furnished the House "a statement of the Balance due "from collectors of Internal Revenue "who are now in the office and the to- "tal amounts of the balances so due as "they appear on the books of the ac- "counting officers of his Department on "the 30th day of June, 1870." In this report, he officially certifies that there were then defalcations to the amount of Twenty Millions Seven Hundred Thousand Nine Hundred and Eighty-three Dollars and Thirty-three Cents, shown by the accounting books of the Treasury.

Radical papers continue to assert that the Democracy of the Southern States approve and indorse the utterances of Jeff Davis. What is the object in circulating this falsehood, and insisting that it is true? It is to create a conviction among credulous Republican voters that the white men of the South still entertain the hope that they can divide the Union and re-establish slavery. The success of the Radical party depends up on the creation of a public opinion that the Southern whites are dangerous men, and un worthy of trust, and should they again be invested with the privileges of citizenship they would seek to bring back the same same order of things that existed in this country at the outbreak of the war.

"Let us have peace," said Grant, when he was nominated for President, and now he and the press and politicians working for his re-nomination are doing all they can do to stir up hatred and bitterness against the South. They want lawlessness and crime there, and every Ku Klux outrage adds to their political capital. The most infamous slanders concerning the southern people are published, comments made on them calculated to revive the passions caused by the war, and these tactics are pursued by the direction of Butler, and Morton, and Grant.—Chicago Times.

Happy Coincidences.

What a number of happy historical coincidences the universal Peace Treaty of Washinton has given birth to. First the British Commissioners arrived here on that greatest birthday anniversary that America celebrates—the 22d of Feburary; the treaty was completed and signed on the 24th of May, the birthday anniversary most acceptable to the Englishmen—that of Queen Victoria; the ratifications were exchanged in London on the 17th of June—the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill, the opening fight of the American Revolution, and a fight in which both sides gained equal glory, for which the British unmistakably whipped us, we gained all the glory; and lastly, the treaty was proclaimed as the accepted law of the land and of the two nations on the glorious Fourth of July. Did any greater conglomeration of auspicious circumstances ever cluster about so great a masterpiece of statesmanship? Does not every date certify to the wise provisions of the treaty for maintaining peace and good will among all English-speaking people?

The July returns of the Statistical Division of the Department to Agriculture show a marked increase in the avreage of corn, amounting to fully 3,000,000 acres, of which 2,000,000 are due to the detemination of the Cotton States to supply themelves. It is assumed that there are of corn 42,000,000 acres, more than half the total average all tilled crops. The only States failing to increase the average in corn are New York, New England, and the Pacific States. The condition of winter wheat on the 1st of July was somewhat above the average. Spring variety presented a worse appearance than has been reported for several years at the same time. Ripening winter wheat has been fully a week earlier than usual, and, a large proportion had been cut at the date of returns. Never was there better promise. The hay crop will be a compariitvely small one. Potatoes promise average yield, if they escape the drought and rot in the future.

Insulting Mr. Greeley.

President Grant has already on several occasions and in various ways insulted the Hon. Horace Greeley, and it is now intimated that he intends to insult him again by tendering to him the place of Commissioner of agriculture.

Of course Mr Greeley—although it is his rule never to shrink from any public duty that may be imposed upon him—will not except this place; but if Grant thinks that by an insult he can put down the Farmers' and Mechanics' Candidate for the Presidency, he will find himself greatly mistaken.—N. Y. Sun.

ON Tuesday morning last President Grant came over the New Jersey Railway to New York without a ticket When the conductor approached to ask for his ticket, a gentleman whispered: "That is the President." "I can not help that," replied the conductor; "my orders are positive. The last time President Grant came over this road a conductor was removed for passing him without a ticket. I must obey my orders." Upon which the President paid the full fare for his journey, with an additional penalty of ten cents for neglecting to buy his ticket in advance.

Mr Colfax again hesitates. He is not much pleased with the idea of Cameron being a candidate for Vice President and thinks, in that event, he will reconsider his purpose to retire and be a candidate himself. If it were a part or parcel of our funeral, we would advise the gentle Schuyler to draw slow, for the inevitable Simon is coming. It is not that Ulysses loves Schuyler less, but because he loves Simon more! It would certainly be unwise for Colfax to give up his amiable intentions to retire from public life, since he sees there is no disposition on the part of his party to force him to remain in it.

Origin of the Orangemen.

The 12th of July is the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, which was fought near that river, in Ireland, in 1690, William the Third of England (called William Orange), at the head of a combined force of English, German and allied detachments of almost every Portestant Kingdom of Europe, and ex-King James the Second, with an invading army of Frenchmen and Irishmen. The battle was a decisive one, ending in the complete overthrow of James and his Catholic supporters.

If there was blood between the Protestant Irishmen and Catholic Irishmen before the battle of the Boyne, the result of that conflict served to intensify and fix more firmly than ever the preexisting hatred of the parties for one another. About a century later, secret societies began to make themselves felt on the side of the Catholic Irishmen, through associations called "The Defenders," or "Ribbonmen." Ostensibly to counteract the Catholics, the Orange organization was founded in the North of Ireland in 1795. The official designation of this body is "The Loyal Orange Institution." It is composed of Protestants, and its professed objects are to support and defend the reigning King or Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and the present royal family so long as it remains Protestant. They associate also in honor of King William the Third, Prince of Orange, whose name they bear, "as supporters of his glorious memory."

The organization has five degrees or orders, the highest being called the Scarlet Degree. They have every element necessary to the maintenance of a secret political organization. Any member marrying a Catholic must be instantly expelled. It has its grand lodges, county, district and subordinate lodges. After the formation 1765 of the Orange Association, the two opposite societies, Orange and Ribbonmen, were soon involved in fierce hostility with each other; and as nearly the whole country belonged to one or the other of the associations, all the inhabitants were in some districts arrayed under opposite banners, and were always ready for mutual conflict. The law was powerless for their suppression, because witnesses were intimidated, and jurymen refused to convict men belonging to their own order.

The Ribbonmen became the "Catholic Association,"—and they and the Orangemen, in 1828, in the north of Ireland, made violent demonstrations, and shed each other's blood. In the following year the celebration by the Orangemen of the anniversary of the Boyne led to bloody conflicts in several counties, in which many were killed and wounded on both sides. The interposition of the military alone suppressed the disturbances. A Parliamentary investigation was had in 1835, which led to the detection of the fact that there were Orange lodges in thirty-four regiments of the army. The following year the Imperial Grand Master, the Duke of Cumberland, was compelled to dissolve the institution in Ireland. It was again revived in 1845, and still maintains its influence in the British Isles. It was introduced into British America 1829, and in 1861 it had 1,200 lodges and about 150,000 members. The statistics of the organization in the United States have not been made public, nor the particular form of the obligation to be taken and observed by each member. It has been asserted through public journals that the oath each member in the United States takes on admission is the same as that taken in Great Britain and the organization has on that account been denounced as Anti-American. In the British Isles the processions of the associations are forbidden by law. That is not the case, however, in British America, and our readers have not forgotten the excitement in Canada caused by the attempt of the Orange societies, in 1860, to compel the Prince of Wales, during his progress through the Provinces, to recognize the order and to pass under its arches and banners, which recognition he and his suite positively refused.

Notice is therefore hereby given said Defendants that unless they be and appear on the first day of the next term of the DeKalb Common Pleas Court, to be holden on the third Monday of September, A. D., 1871, at the Court House in Auburn, in said county, and State, and answer or demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in their absence.

Witness my name and the seal of said Court, affixed at Auburn, this 18th day of July, A. D., 1871.

J. R. LANNING, Clerk.

By S. W. SPROTT, Deputy Clerk.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of an execution to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Common Pleas Court, in a cause wherein Mary Houghton is Plaintiff and Jotham Woolsey and Samuel W. Sprott are Defendants, required me to make the sum of five hundred and sixty-eight dollars and sixty-four cents, with interest on said judgment and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder on Saturday, the fifth day of August, A. D., 1871, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit: All that portion of the west half of the southeast quarter of section three (3), in township thirty-three (33), north of range thirteen east, lying and being south of the Auburn and Spencerville road running through said land, and enough more off the east side of the balance of said described land to make in all fifty acres in DeKalb County, Indiana. If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment, interest and costs, I will, at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment, interest and cost.

Said sale will be made without relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

JEREMIAH PLUM,
Sheriff of DeKalb County.

GEO. W. MAXWELL, Deputy sheriff.

Eel River Road.—An additional force has recently been added to that alreadp employed on this line, and the contractors are rushing things with a will.

A young man wants to know what business he had better go into that will enable him to occupy a high position in society. Let him try the roofing business.

Franklin said, "a newspaper and Bible in every house, and a good school in every district, are the principal supporters of virtue, morality and civil liberty."

That great invention recently announced, that was to "effect a perfect revolution in the sawing of wood," has been explained. It is a circular saw.

The Boston Folio, a magazine of music republishes the piece of poetry about the Auburn brass band, which appeared in the Courier recently.

The man who earns a dollar a day and spends the same, comes to the end of his rope on Sunday, when he must either starve or go a visiting. The latter is generally preferred.

The Fort Wayne Journal has a subscriber 95 years old. It is fair to explain, however, that he is blind and deaf, and his longevity under the circumstances is thus partly accounted for.

Lightning.—The Court House at Angola, was yesterday morning struck by lightning. No damage was sustained, other than completely demoralizing the patent rod.

You can buy, at the popular Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block, Ft. Wayne, Ind., good all wool casimere suits for ten dollars, better ones $15, and the best for $18. Call and see them.

Fine black suits can be bought at the Red Front Clothing House from $12 to $14 all finer goods in proportion. Remember the place go see and be convinced before you buy.

Pay Up.—Those who subscribed to the fund for the base ball club and have not paid in their subscription, are requested to do so at once to

G. C. Ralston.

J. A. Smith, of the firm of Smith & Hare returned last Tuesday, from an extended visit to Ohio, looking as handsome and healthy as ever. Ohio is a good State in which to rusticate.

"Adversity," says a western preacher, "takes us up short and sets us down hard, and when it's done with us we felt as contented as a boy that's been spanked and set away to cool."

Goak.—A countryman, after reading the Doctor's sign, "J. A. Cowan, M. D." asked for the Doctor on the supposition that he was from Maryland, and wanted [illegible] living there.

The [illegible] of Samuel Guy, of Butler Tp. [illegible], dropped dead, while pursuing her daily avocations, Friday [illegible]. She was seventy years old, and was one of the earliest settlers of that county.

The Rockfords, of this place, play a match game of ball with the Haymakers, on Saturday next. If they don't play better than the second nine did they'll get waxed.

Having a buyer in New York all the time buying goods for cash only, the Red Front Clothing House can substantiate all it advertises and sells good cheaper than other houses can buy them for.

All the clothing men are crying clothing is going up since the advance in wages, but the popular Red Front Clothing House are selling goods cheaper than ever. We purchased our winter goods in May when they were very low, and will give our customers the advantage. Come and see us at No. 5 Keystone Block, Fort Wayne.

Mr. Miller an old resident of this county, and now about 70 years of age, cradled forty dozen of wheat in a half day during the present harvest. A good job for an old man.

The lightning has done much damage this summer in the burning of barns in different portions of the State, but thus far our own county has been singularly exempt from destructive electrical visitations.

Our accomplished friend B. F. Kennedy Esq., of the Waterloo Press, gave us a call last Tuesday evening. Frank is a good printer, a clever writer, and a genial, companionable fellow, and we will be pleased to see him often.

B. & O. R. R.—The corps of engineers on our route got through on the line west last Saturday, and were expected to be at Albion, last Thursday, to correct up and run a line on the north of that place. They will probably be here in a few days.

There were quite a number of excellent singers accompanied the Editorial excursion, and when accompanied by the Burdette organ, in the Pullman Palace Car, added much to the enjoyment and sociability of the party by dispensing music—sacred, patriotic, sentimental and mixed. The glee club was a success.

Notice to Wagon Makers.—The Pioneer Hardware has just received a large invoice of iron, seat and buggy springs, axles and skeins, dry hubs and spokes, &c., which will be sold at reduced prices. Go to Davis' for all goods of this character. Also a large assortment of paints, sash doors, glass, oils, &c., at the lowest rates.

Curious.—Father Burlingame brought to our office yesterday, a potato, through which several perfectly formed new potatoes have began to develop themselves, without the usual sprouting process. The young potatoes are formed and grown upon the inside of the old one, until they have burst through at different places, looking exactly like other new ones. It is quite a curiosity.

We met Brown, of the Columbia City Post, Baker of the Commercial, Craig, of the Bluffton Banner, and Foster, of the Monroeville Democrat, at Fort Wayne, last Thursday. They were there doubtless to see the Kekiongas run them Athletic "fellows," around the bases twenty four times, but we went on business,—making it suit however, to be there the same day that this game was played.

Louisville boasts of an eighteen-year-old belle who can lift a tub of clothing from the ground to an elevation of four feet, and save the clothes-line white with results of the labor of her own little white hands in a short while. Meantime her mother sits in the parlor taking her ease in her old age. Very few such belles in the country. They are not fashionable generally, yet always make the best wives.

Capt. Hicks was in town yesterday.—Goshen Democrat.

Wonder if he is related to the late "G. L." of this county.—Whitley Commercial.

Think not. The Captain is from South Carolina, was commander of the Rebel gun boat, "Retribution," and [illegible] the new departure. He paid us a visit last week.

The editor sat in his office [illegible] day, and thought to himself in a [illegible] way; he threw down his ex's and [illegible] his pen, and appeared quite as mad a very wet hen. So he invented a machine that turns with a crank—it always settled his bills in the bank. It wrote music sweet as the open air [illegible]; but it did not—it would not—it could not write locals—when there was no news in town.

Died.—At South Bend, on July 20th, Mrs. Jane Coe. Deceased died very suddenly. She had been afflicted with ague for several days and was lying in bed at the time of her death conversing hopefully with her daughter about recovering, when she was taken with a conjestive chill and immediately expired. She was the mother of Howard Coe, formerly of this place. Her remains were taken to Ohio for interment.

The editor of the Kendallville Standard is following in the footsteps of the illustrious Bonner. He's some on "hoss."—Hear him:

—"Any person having a horse 16 hands high, weight about 1100 pounds, light cream color, with heavy, white mane and tail, that will match one owned by the editor of this paper, can get $500 for it by giving us a call. Exchanges making a note of this will do a favor to a poor orphan boy, of whom we are which."

The Bond Case.—The celebrated Blair bond case in change of venue before Judge Clapp, was on Tuesday of this week dismissed by the court, for the reason that as the County had recovered a judgment against Blair the principal and not the sureties, at a former time, the court held the suit could not be maintained against the sureties. And thus against the case and will have to go to the Supreme Court. The decision of the court is by many very seriously questioned. More hereafter when we get the time.

Husbands ought "to keep out of the kitchen." A husband who did not, writes thus of the consequences; "I found fault some time ago with Maria Ann's custard pie. Maria made it after my recipe. It [illegible] longer than any other pie we ever had. Maria set it on the table every day for dinner, and you see I could not eat it because I forgot to tell her to put in any eggs or shortening. It was economical, but in a fit of generosity I stole it from the pantry and gave it to a poor little boy in the neighborhood. The boy's funeral was largely attended by his former playmates. I did not go myself."

Suppose a man and a girl were married and which is, of course, impossible—that, at the time of the hymeneal contract, the man was thirty-five years old and the girl five; which makes the man seven times as old as the girl. They live together until the girl is ten years—this makes him forty years old, and four times as old as the girl; they live until she is fifteen, the man being forty-five—this makes the man three times as old; they still live until she is thirty years old—this makes the man sixty, only twice as old. And now, as we haven't time to work it out [illegible] will be good enough to tell us how long they would have to live to make the girl as old as the man.

Smith & Hare came very near being favored with an explosion, the other evening. The coal oil that had saturated the ground around the barrel became ignited, and loomed up considerably before it was extinguished. There is danger always lurking in this volatile fluid, and you cannot be too careful.

Oysters.—Con. Schenck is the only person in Fort Wayne that keeps fresh oysters, all the year round. We tried some the other day and found them splendid. If you want a good dinner go to Con on Calhoun street, between the Aveline and Mayer House, and you will be served in the best of style.

The Folio.—This delightful Magazine of music, comes to us full of everything that is new and interesting in the musical world. All those who have any taste for music should certainly take a copy. Each number contains an engraving of some of our most noted singers, and several fine selections of music worth more than the price of the magazine. Address White, Smith & Perry, 300 Washington Street, Boston.

In Luck.—We have the announcement before us that we have been made a knight in I. K. Z. Lodge, at Fort Wayne, and now have the glorious privilege of enjoying the honor of an Honorary member of that illustrious but mysterious body. Thanks, gentlemen, or who ever you may be. We bow in humility to this powerful conclave, but if we are to be dumped into the canal like Tom Taylor, we beg leave to say that we much prefer to contemplate your many virtues at this distance, if its all the same to you. Chalk us down present every time.

Wheat Market.—Our merchants have been doing quite a large business in the new wheat during the last ten days. During last week about 7,000 bushels were delivered at the depot in this place. Our farmers seem to be taking advantage of the present market rates and we doubt not, but that the prices now are as high as will be realized for some time to come. The tendency of the market east is downward, though a foreign demand may produce a firmer rate, and cause a slight advance.

Disgraceful.—The practice of playing ball on Sunday is becoming very prevalent in this place. The fields adjoing town are resorted to at each return of Sabbath, and the usual hollowing and cursing generally indulged in. We like ball playing, and have always been a great admirer of the game, but we think it should be frowned down upon when practised on Sunday. Young men that have any respect for themselves will not be guilty of such conduct, while younger boys should be restrained by their parents from thus desecrating the Sabbath. We hope for the sake of the good name of our place that there will be no more of it in the future.

Counterfeits.—So many spurious greenbacks are now flooded over the country, of such a character as to decieve the most knowing ones as to their genuineness, and often innocent parties have to suffer a severe loss because of this fact, especially those who handle money in large amounts. But a new system is now being taught by C. Crabbs, Esq., of Fort Wayne, whereby all can detect the most delicately executed counterfeit in the country. His system is infallible, as he will convince you, or charge you nothing. He gives four tests by which any one can tell a good bill from a bad one. As his charge for this valuable information is moderate, all should avail themselves of its advantage.

Cheese Manufactory.—I am now manufacturing cheese for the trade, and have on hand a large lot, which I warrant good, not made of skimmed milk. My cows are fed on tame grass, clover and timothy and fresh pure water—no stagnant swamp water on the farm. I use Roe's patent premium cheese vat with improved heater, the best in the world, also Roe's improved lever and weight cheese press, patent expansion hoops, &c. I am now selling at 13 and 14 cents per pound. Dairy one-fourth mile south of Auburn, on the Fort Wayne road.

J. Stamets.

July 20-3m.

Blackberry Wine.—Gather when ripe on a dry day. Put into a vessel with the head out, and a tap fitted near the bottom; pour on them boiling water to cover them. Mash the berries with your hands, and let them stand covered till pulp rises to the top, and forms a crust in three or four days. Then draw off the fluid into another vessel, and to every gallon add one pound of sugar; mix well and put into a cask to work for a week or ten days, and throw off any remaining lees, keeping the cask well filled, particularly at the commencement. When working has ceased, bung it down; after six or twelve months it may be bottled.

Base Ball.—The Rockfords of this place, composed of the little "[illegible]" of town, [illegible] the Second Nine, made up of [illegible] fellows who are just old enough to wear down on their upper lips, and imagine [illegible], to play a friendly game, last Saturday, just for sport, you know. These flashy youths at first declined, "too small" "mere infants," etc, were the remarks, and they feared the game would be monotonous. Finally they agreed, and were [illegible] taken in by the Juveniles. What a fall was there, my countrymen. It was so interesting we append the score:

COOPER RALSTON and JAMES JOHNSON, Scorers.

John Perry, who resides with his grand son, David Scoles, about four miles north of here, and who is seventy-five years of age, took up after a reaper, through the entire harvest, and stood up to the work as well as any one of the hands who were much younger.—Indianian.

A girl thirteen years old, named Sarilda Ender, was caught in the woods near Boggstown station, Shelby county, on the morning of the 2d by a young man named Barney McGee, and ravised. McGee was arrested and lodged in jail at Shelbyville.

Where is Marshall?—We never had a correct idea of the exact geographical position of this beautiful village, until enlightened by two of our enterprising citizens, the other day, who, imbued with a spirit of philanthropy, determed to settle at once and forever the vexatious question, "Where is Marshall?" It was by accident, however, that the solution of the question was solved. You see cars will carry a fellow past his destination, when he's asleep just as well as when he is awake and its nobody's business but their own. A fellow's eyes will get a little heavy after riding part of the night, and sometimes he likes it so well that he goes even thirty miles beyond the point at which he first contemplated stopping. What if some do laugh in their sleeve you ain't 'sponsible are you? Not much. But really, this thing of hunting for a train at four o'clock in the morning among a labyrinth of freight cars, is delightful, and how mad it makes a fellow when somebody comes along and says the train don't go till six. No, sir, we prefer the "blue line" to all others, 'cause its fast and retired, every body don't ride on it. It was a beautiful sight, Samivel, my boy, with those blue cars in the back ground, myself, on top urging Johny to anchor himself along side. Say blue line to Geo. and Newby and you can hear a melodious laugh until the train heaves out of sight. But we won't tell.

State Items.

Our friend, J. B. Stoll, editor of the Ligonier Banner, is very highly complimented by the Valparaiso Vidette, the South Bend Register and other papers, for the excellent manner in which he managed the late excursion.

Benjamin Williamson, a farmer residing near Bluffton, had his entire crop of hay (thirteen tons) which he had just finished stacking, destroyed by fire on the 8th. It was fired by a spark from a neighboring clearing.

A farmer living near Martinville, cut, thrashed his wheat, took eight bushels of it to the mill had it ground and ate some of the flour made into buscuits for supper all of which was done there on Friday of last week. That is what might be called 'business.'

Joel Hily, an old citizen of Jackson township, was brought to town on last Fridap in a deranged condition, resulting from overwork and overheating in hearvest. He was taken to Indianapolis by Sheriff Cisney, where he will receive medical treatment.—Warsaw Union.

A brakeman on the T. W. & W. Railway named Daniel Franks, fell the cars of a freight train, at Roanoke, yesterday, while the train was moving along at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, and was instantly killed. Half the train, twelve cars, passed over him, mangling his body in a most horrible manner.—Huntington Democrat.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.—Mr. Steel, the Chief Engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was in this city last Monday and together with Messrs. Early and Crane visited the corps of engineers now at work on the southern line of the contemplated road. The engineers of this route passed through on a line about six miles south of this city, last Saturday and make a highly favorable report of their work.—Argus.

Fifty-four miles of the Eel River Railroad will be completed in a few months at farthest. When this is done, a very large amount of conditional and unconditional stock will become due and payable at once. We do hope every subscriber to the capital stock of the road will make preparation to pay his note without the ceremony of being ask. The officers of the road have labored diligently, expending much time and money to get the work in its present favorable condition, and it is now but just that all should meet their indebtedness promptly. Let us all be as prompt to pay, as the officers of the road have been prompt to labor for our benefit.—Col. City Post.

BURLINGTON.

Leaving the East and arriving at Chicago or Indianapolis, how shall we reach the West? The best Line is acknowledged to be the C., B. & Q., joined together with the Iron Bridge at Burlington, and called the Burlington Route.

The main line of the route running to Omaha, connects with the great Pacific Roads, and forms to-day the leading route to California. The Middle Branch, entering Nebraska at Plattsmouth, passes through Lincoln, the State Capitol, and will this year be finished to Fort Kearney, forming the shortest route across the Continent by over 100 miles.

Another branch of the B. & M., diverging at Red Oak, falls into a line running down the Missouri through St. Joe to Kansas City, and all Kansas. Passengers by this route to Kansas, see Illinois, Southern Iowa, and Missouri, and, by slight divergence, can see Nebraska also.

Lovers of fine views should remember the Burlington Route, for its towns "high-gleaming from afar"—its tree-fringed streams—its rough bluffs and quarries—its corn-oceans stretching over the prairies further than eye can reach.

Land-buyers will be sure to remember, for they have friends among the two thousand who have already bought farms from Geo. S. Harris, the Land Commissioner of the B. & M. R. R. at Burlington, Iowa, or among the four thousand home dealers and pre-emptors who last year filed claims in the Lincoln land office, where "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm."

Fact.—The eclipse of the moon did not come to time, and a great many people were consequently disappointed; but those who go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport expecting to get a bargain are never disappointed; for he is just now giving such bargains as will satisfy any reasonable man.

MARKLEY SHRDVER & CO.

What One of a Band Told a Newspaper Correspondent.

[Herald Georgia Letter.]

I have found one at last—a real, live, genuine Ku Klux, at least he used to be one. I met him on the cars [illegible] tall, six-feet [illegible] twenty-two [illegible] of age, and with a new moustache and soft brown eyes.

In the course of general conversation (and it has struck me as somewhat singular that the people down South almost invariably introduce this subject in speaking to strangers) the subject of the Ku Klux was brought forward. I ventured to express some doubts as to there ever having been an organized band of Ku Klux.

My soft-eyed companion smiled a facinating smile, and said he thought I was mistaken. "In fact," said he, "I was once a Ku Klux myself;" and the soft eyes shot a gleam or two that seemed to indicate he would very much enjoy being a Ku Klux again.

He went on to say: "It was [illegible] years or so ago, when I lived in Montgomery, Alabama, that ten of us all young men organized a Ku Klux Klan. We organized to frighten the negroes and to have some fun. Doubtless you saw in the papers of that time long accounts of our mysterious doings. We first thought of the organization to scare the negroes from the Loyal League meetings. There was a young medical student among our number who had the skeleton of a man.

We frightened more negroes with this skeleton than in any other way. Taking it out on the road toward where there was a large negro settlement, we would attach a strong cord to it, and put it over a limb overhanging the road. We would then get securely back, and whenever a negro came along the skeleton would be gently let down in front of him. If it was too dark for him to see it he would feel the cold hard bones, and if he could see it it never failed to frighten him half to death, and in either case the negro ran as hard as he could, yelling 'murder! ghosts! and Ku Klux!' and, sir, I tell you the negro that wouldn't 'holler' when that skeleton touched him wasn't in the neighborhood of Montgomery." Here the soft eyes were closed in their owner's keen relish of the long-ago fright of the negroes.

"But wasn't there danger in your peculiar way of fun making?"

"Just, sir, enough to make it enjoyable.

We were fired at severable times, but none of us were ever hit. The darkies, you know, very superstitious, and firing on us so often and never bringing down any of game, they grew more and more terrified at the tall white apparitions that suddenly confront them in the dark woods. You see I am very tall myself; well; two of us, with white sheets thrown over us, would get on the side of the road, and getting one on the shoulders of the other squat as low down as possible. Then when a negro came along, we would slowly rise up, getting taller and taller, until the negroes would swear we were Ku Klux forty feet high."

"Did you never shoot back at the negroes?"

"Oh no. We never used the least bit of violence during the continuance of our organization. There was one time when we were all pretty badly frightened. There was a large negro meeting of some kind being held in front of the State House one evening We got about two pounds of this stuff they make blue lights with in the theatres, and put it around the gateway to the capitol. When the meeting got pretty well under headway, we touched off our little hell, and I tell you hell was to pay then, sure enough. We had put enough of that stuff there to have lasted Niblo's garden for twelve months. The flames—blue, develish-looking flames—shot up [illegible]. The fire bells were rung, the whole police force turned out, and the negroes were nearly frightened to death. They rushed out into the streets and as nearly [illegible] they fired their pistols indiscriminately in every direction. We kept the negroes thoroughly frightened around Montgomery for some time. I remember on another occasion we had inserted in the morning papers a notice to the effect that the K. K. K. would meet at the den of death, at the sound of the earthquake. That evening we got some thirty pounds of powder and went out toward the cemetery, where there was an old piece of artillery. This we cleaned and loaded it to the muzzle, put a slow match to it and got out of the way. And when that gun went off you can bet there was a little earthquake sure enough."

"How long [illegible] keep up this [illegible] nocturnal [illegible] business?"

"[illegible] after a while the boys got tired of it, and when bad men commenced to do mischief under the name of Ku Klux, we disbanded our organization."

Soon after, the soft-eyed Ku Klux (who is the son of a clergyman of some note) took his departure; and so came and went the only Ku Klux I have ever yet been able to discover bodily.

Our Great City.

From the message of Mayor Hall we learn that New York Island has an area of twenty-two square miles, and twenty-nine miles of water front; that its streets, roads and avenues measure [illegible] miles, [illegible] of which are paved, and 163 miles unpaved; that to light this area, water front, and streets 19,000 gas-lights are burned every night at the public expense; that beneath the city [illegible] 340 miles of Croton water-pipes, and 370 miles of sewers; that 1,000 horse-railway cars, 267 omnibuses, about twelve thousand licensed carts, and many more private ones, constantly traverse our thoroughfares; that the resident population of the city is 942,292 souls; 1871, $284,000,000 worth of foreign merchandise was imported into this metropolis, and that during the same period New York city paid the Federal Government $150,000,000 for duties on imports, while the value of imports exclusive of specie, was $251,000,000; that the amount of fixed valuation for the real and personal property of the city is $1,075,000,000, and the taxes for the year $23,[illegible].

The English divines engaged in revising the New Testament have held their eleventh session, and get as far in their work as the end of the sixth chapter of St. Mark's Gospel

That geniel philosopehr, Josh Billings, says a large policy of life insurance doesn't [illegible] a man's [illegible] window, but it helps amazingly to get another fellow to do it for him.

In clearing the obstructions from James river, the magazine of the rebel iron-clad Richmond, and the powder it contained, were both found in a state of perfect preservation after a submersion of more than five years.

Boston papers mention as a remarkable fact that fifty-two officers of that city indulged a pleasure excursion lately, and instead of charging the expense to the city paid it themselves. They will probably be removed from office for this singular disregard of precedent.

A locomotive whistle can be heard, under ordinary circumstances, 3,300 yards, or nearly two miles; the noise of a railway train 2,800 yards, the bark of a dog or the report of a musket 1,800 yards; the roll of the drum, 1,600 yards, and the human voice, 1,000 yards. A dinner horn in the country is often heard five miles.

A foot race took place at Cincinnati one day last week, which was participated in by some three thousand citizens. They all came out ahead of the lunatic who was after them with a carving-knife. Some men who have not traveled faster than a walk for years are said to have beaten the time of that California horse.

There has been an item going around about a hen in Boston laying eggs so small that twenty-one of them were put in a collar box at once. That looked like pretty small business for an able-bodied hen, until the author of the story was discovered. He said it was a horse collar box he meant.

A letter addressed "To Eny Prominent Busisaniss Man Handleling Butchers Stock Quincy Il's." and containing the following marginal directions, "Post master, will please hand this to some fat cattle man," was received at the Post Office in Quincy recently. In accordance with the request the letter was handed to the fattest cattle man in the town.

The importance of careful punctuation cannot be insisted on too urgently. Here are a few instances which illustrte it:—'Wanted a young man to take charge of a pair of horses of a religious turn of mind.' 'A child was run over by a wagon three years old and cross-eyed with pantalets on which never spoke afterwards.' 'Lost, an enamelled lady's gold watch and chain and charms.'

To say that the handwriting of Mr Greeley rivals in grace and elegance the lines of the engraver would be conspicuously inexact. It is not suprising, therefore, that in writing an allusion to 'Anna Dickinson's lecture on Joan of Arc,' the compositor set it up, 'Any Ducthman can't play a Jew's-harp.'

Two women in Stanton, got into a fight about an egg that a hen of one of the woman laid in the barn of the other. Then [illegible] engaged in [illegible] before it ended one of the women had her back broken by a stroke from a club and will die.

Two children were recently born from the same mother in Memphis, Tenn., with an interval of four days between the births Both are healthy, and there is no perceptible difference, except that one is a little larger than the other.

A very precocious child has appeared, it is said, at Jamestown, Penn. Though barely three years old, he is four feet high has a head, arms and legs as large as an ordinary man's, strong voice, and remarkable mental powers. His delighted father one George S. Kingston, thinks of exhibiting his phenomenal son.

The excitement in Muncie over the wild woman has cooled down, and the people are divided in opinion as to whether it was a sell or a reality. And now comes Selma, with the marvel of a [illegible] well beaten path through a corn field, formed by the feet of some monster, too broad and irregular in outline to be those of a human being, but still bearing some resemblance. Perhaps the big-footed girl of Lafayette has strayed over into Delaware county.

A Philadelphia young lady who appeared at the naval ball, Cape May, on the 4th of July, enjoys the distinction of having a dress made entirely of white lace, which was purchased in Brussels at a cost of about $7,000. It is kept in an air-tight case, and the sunlight is never allowed to fall upon it. The young lady will undoubtedly create a sensation before the season closes.

In [illegible] that no clue whatever was left as to his whereabouts for the authorities to work up on, and henceforth no effort has been made, and probably never will be to effect his arrest.—Lexington Reporter.

A Mrs. Vail, a widow living in the family of a brother-in-law, near Terre Couper, St. Joseph county, committed suicide last Tuesday. She dressed herself neatly, and then went to the garret of the house and and hung herself. She was probably insane.

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

J. WALKER, Proprietor. R. H. McDONALD & CO., Druggists and Gen. Agents, San Francisco, California, and 32 and 34 Commerce Street, New York.

What Comes of Having a Step-mother

David Addinton, a citizen of Bunker Hill, Indiana, has, for some months, been treating his son, a bright boy of about ten years, in such a brute-like manner, that the State has taken his case in hand. He has beaten the child upon the most trivial provocations, with a gun ramrod and black-snake whip, till life was scarcely left in him, inflicting bruises that remained for weeks sickening marks of shame. He has, also, on many occasions, driven the little fellow away from home in the evening, and forced him to seek shelter during cold, inclement nights, in dry goods boxes, lying at the stores of the village. It is said that Addinton's wife, who is stepmother to him, is little better than the demoniac father, and that she is the cause of much of the latter's cruelty.

RANGER.

A little boat [illegible],
And a child there fast asleep,
Floating out on the wave,
Out to the perilous deep,—
Out to the living waters,
That brightly dance and gleam,
That beat their foam about him,
To wake him form his dream.

He rubs his pretty eyes,
He shakes his curly head,
And says, with great surprise,
"Why, I'm not asleep in bed!"
The boat is rising and sinking
Over the sailors' graves;
And he laughs out "Isn't it nice,
Playing see-saw with the waves!"

Alas! he little thinks
Of the grief on the [illegible] sands,
Where his mother trembles and shrinks,
And his sister wrings her hands,
Watching in speechless terror,
The boat and the flaxen head.
Is there no hope of succor?
Must they see him drowned or dead?

They see him living now,
Living and jumping about;
He stands on the giddy prow,
With a merry laugh and shout,
Oh! spare him! spare him! spare him!
Spare him, thou cruel deep!
The child is swept from the prow,
And the wild waves dance and leap.

They run to the edge of the shore,
Then stretch out their arms to him:
Knee deep they wade more,
But alas! they cannot swim.
Their pretty, pretty darling!
His little hat floats by;
They see his frightened face,
They hear his drowning cry.

Something warm and strong
Dashes before them then,
Hairy and curly and strong,
And brave as a dozen men;
Bounding, panting, grasping,
Rushing straight as a dart,
Ready to die in the cruse,
A dog with a loyal heart.

He fights with the fighting sea,
He grandly won his prize!
Mother! he brings it thee,
With triumph in his eyes.
He brings it thee, O mother!
His burden, pretty and pale;
He lays it down at thy feet,
And wags his honest old tail.

O dog, so faithful and bold!
O dog, so tender and true!
You shall wear a collar of gold,
And a crown, if you like it, too.

* * * * *

O Ranger, do just what you choose,
Old friend, so gallant and dear!
What churl would dare refuse
To drink your health with a cheer?
Old friend, in love and honor
Your name shall be handed down,
And children's hearts shall beat
At the tale of your renown.

Who They Are.

My old friend Marsden was a landlord of some note, and he was famed for queer stories, especially when a little set up, some of which are remembered round here—though they are unfortunately of a kind that will not do to print. It is too bad that the best things said should be of a nature to debar their publication; but such always has been the fact, from the early wits until now. Mrs. Marsden was a very inquisitive woman, and was always anxious to know something about every stranger that sojourned within the gates. The old man was often annoyed by her inquiries, though he tried to give her correct answers; but at last patience and information gave out together and he drew upon his fancy for facts. One day, two strange looking men stopped at the house, and Mrs. M. was immediately on the anxious seat to know something about them, and the next evening, while engaged in an innocent game of euchre with her worthy husband, seeing the same gentlemen in the next room, she opened her battery as follows:

"Mr. Marsden, who are them strange looking men?"

'Who?—them?' pointing his thumb toward them.

'Yes, them,' rather tartly.

'Oh! them are two chaps—one from Egypt and the other from Jerusalem—goin' to give an exhibition up here.'

'Air they? Well they'll fail sartin. Why 'tis nothing but exhibitions all the time—circus and furbelows, and some kind of jimeracks or other. Better do somethin' useful, they had.'

'But this is a religious exhibition,' said the old man; 'a scripteral illustration like you know.'

'A which?'

'A sort of scripteral thing—like Bunyin's Pilgrimage.'

'Ah! indeed! What is it?'

'Why,' said he, 'they are goin' to exhibit the sling that David killed Goliah with. 'Tis a little thing, and terribly out of repair. The strings are gone and the leather all rotted away, and there's nothing left but the hole.'

The old lady was very indignant, and she never inquired about anybody for a fortnight.

The Other Side.

In looking over a note-book of my father's written many years ago, I came across an anecdote, which, if it has never appeared in print before, is too good to be lost. While John Brance of North Carolina was General Jackson's Secretary of the Navy, he, Tazwell, and Daniel Webster were walking on the north bank of the Potomac, at Washington, Tazwell, willing to amuse himself with Branch's simplicity said, 'Branch, I'll bet you a ten dollar hat that I can prove that you are on the other side of the river.'

'Done,' said Branch.

'Well,' said Tazell, pointing to the opposite shore, 'isn't that one side of the river?'

'Yes.'

'Well, isn't this the other side?'

'Yes.'

'Then as you are here are you not on the other side?'

'Why, I declare," said poor Branch, 'so it is! but here comes Webster. I'll win back the hat from him.'

Webster he lagged behind, but now came up, and Branch accosted him:

'Webster I'll bet you a ten dollar hat I can prove to that you are on the other side of the river.

'Done!'

'Well, isn't this one side?'

'Yes.'

'Well, isn't this the other side?'

'Yes, but I am not on that side.

Branch hung his head, and submitted to the loss of the two hats as quicly as he could.

How a Magician was Sold.

Signor Blitz relates the following good one on himself:

While conversing in a grocery store with the proprietor, at Louisville, Ky., an Irishman came in to make some purchases. The trader was extremely anxious for me to astonish him by performing some feat, which I complied with. Before commencing, I requested the loan of a quarter of a dollar from the Hibernian, which he at first refused, and even when the storekeeper pledged himself responsible for it, he reluctantly gave it to me. I desired him to close his hand, and hold the money secure, and I would change it to a five dollar gold piece.

'Faith,' he muttered, as he grasp the quarter, 'it was just I would like ye to be after doing; but I don't believe ye can coin money so aisy. Let me see if you can do it!' he excitedly exclaimed.

'It is already done,' I said. 'Open your hand and look.'

The man cautiously relaxed his fingers, and, at the first glimpse of the gold, jumped and hurrahed wildly, as an Irishman only can; but when his curiosity was entirely satisfied as to its reality he carefully deposited it in his pocket, with many thanks, declaring me to be the most wonderful man in the world.

I here desired him to replace the money in my hand, and I would again convert it to the original quarter.

'Sure, after Mike being rich, would ye make him poor again?'

'But you know it is only a trick,' I answered.

'A trick? Divil a one! Sure, man, it is a rale piece of goold,'—thrusting his hand into his pocket, to protect it from any sudden or unperceived effort on my part to extract it.

'You know it is but a joke,' I repeated. Return me the gold, and I will astonish you by transforming it into silver once more.'

'By St. Patrick, you had better not do that!'

'Yes, you must give me back the gold piece.'

'I would not part with it were priest McDermott to bid me.'

Finding my efforts to procure the money a failure, I resorted to artifice by alarming his fears of my power to do good or evil. I assured him that unless he returned the peice of gold, he would always be a miserable man all his life, for it is Satan's coin, who was always around in search of his own, and would take him away with the gold.

'Och, sure, your honor, the Holy Father will save Mike, and if ye want any more silver quarters to change into gold, come to Michael McCarty. He is the man for you.' And with these consoling words, he walked rapidly away, leaving me minus my half eagle, while the storekeeper laughed immoderately at the magician being outwitted by a son of the Emerald Isle.

All Louisville became cognizant of the joke, as they called it, and hugely enjoyed it my expense; but I could not see it as such.

How to be Polite.

Do not try to hard to be polite. Never overwhelm your friends by begging them to make themselves at home or they will soon wish they were here. Show by your actions rather than your words that you are glad to see them.

Have enough regard for yourself to treat your greatest enemy with quiet politeness. All petty slights are merely meanness and hurt yourself more than any one else.

Do not talk about yourself or your family to the exclusion of other topics. What if you are clever and a little more so than other people, it may not be that other folks will think so, whatever they ought to go.

It may be interesting to you to talk over your ailments, but very tiresome to others to listen to.

Make people think you consider them clever and agreeable and they will be pretty apt to have a pleasant impression of yourself.

Treat people just as you would like to have them treat you.

It is much easier to lose the good opinion of others he or she is not worthy of respect.

Do not excuse your house, furniture, or the table you set before your guests. It is fair to suppose their visits are to you, not you surroundings.

The whole machinery of social intercourse is very delicate and intricate, and it is our business to keep all places of possible friction well supplied with the oil of politeness.

An Irishman, having jumped into the water to save a man from drowning, upon receiving a quarter from the person as a reward for the service, looked first at the money and then at him, at last exclaimed: "I'm overpaid for the job!"

THE MANAGING WIFE.

Ezra Newton has just finished looking over his yearly accounts. "Well," asked his wife, looking up, "how do you come out?"

'I find,' said her husband, 'that my expenses during the last year have been thirty-seven cents over a thousand dollars.'

'And your income has been a thousand dollars?'

'Yes. I managed pretty well, didn't I?'

'Do you think it managing well to exceed your income?' said the wife.

'What's thirty-seven cents?' asked Mr. Newton, lightly.

'Not much, to be sure but still something. It seems to me that we ought to have saved, instead of falling behind.'

'But how can we save on this salary, Elizabeth? We haven't lived extravagantly. Still it seems to have taken it all.'

'Perhaps there is something in which we might retrench. Suppose you mention some of your items.'

'The most important are house rent, one hundred and fifty dollars, and articles of food five hundred dollars.'

'Just half.'

'Yes, and you'll admit we cant retrench there, Elizabeth. I like to live well. I had enough of poor board before I was married. Now, I mean to live as well as I can.'

'Still we ought to be saving up something against a rainy day, Ezra.'

'That would be some thing like carrying and umbrella when the sun shines.'

'Still it is well to have an umbrella in the house.'

'I can't controvert your logic, Elizabeth but I'm afraid we shan't be able to save anything this year. When I get my salary raised it will be time enough to thing of that.'

'Let me make a proposition to you,' said Mrs. Newton. 'You say one-half of your income has been expended on articles of food. Are you willing to allow me that sum for the purpose.'

'You guarantee to pay all bills out of it?'

'Yes.'

'Then I will shift the responsibility upon you with pleasure. But I can tell you beforehand, that you won't be able to save much out of it.'

'Perhaps not. At any rate, I will engage not to exceed it.'

'That's well. I shouldn't relish having any additional bills to pay. As I am paid every month, I will at each payment hand you half the money.'

The different characters of husband and wife may be judged from the conversation which has been recorded. Mr. Newton had but little prudence or foresight. He lived chiefly for the present, and seemed to fancy that whatever contingencies might arise in the future he would somehow be provided for. Now, trust in Providence is very proper feeling, but there is a good deal of truth in the old adage that God will help those who help themselves.

Mrs. Newton, on the contrary, had been brought up in a family which was compelled to be economical, and although she was not disposed to deny herself comforts, yet she felt that it was desirble to procure them at a fair price. The time at which this conversation took place was at the commencement of the second year of their married life.

The first step which Mr. Newton took on accepting the charge of the household expenses was to institute the practice of paying cash for all articles that came under her department. She accordingly called on the butcher and inquired:

'How often have you been in the habit of presenting your bills, Mr. Williams?'

'Once in six months,' was the reply.

'And I suppose you sometimes have bad bills?'

'Yes, one-third of my profits, on an average, are swept off by them.'

'And you could afford, I suppose, to sell somewhat cheaper for ready money?'

'Yes, and I would be glad if all my customers would give me a chance to do so?'

'I will set them an example, then,' said Mr. Newton. "Hereafter, whatever articles shall be purchased of you will be paid for on the spot, and we will expect you to sell as reasonable as you can.'

The arrangement was also made with the others, who, it is scarcely needful to say, were very glad to enter into the great support of trade, and a cash customer is worth two who purchase on credit.

Fortunately Mrs. Newton had a small supply of money by her, which lasted till the first monthly installment from her husband became due. Thus she was enable to carry out her cash plan from the beginning.

Another plan which occured to her as likely to save expense, was to purchase articles in large quantities. She had soon saved enough from the money allowed her to do this. For example, instead of buying sugar a few pounds at a time, she purchased in saving a cent or more on the pound. This, perhaps, amounted to but a trifle in the course of a year, but the same system carried out in regard to other articles yielded a result which was by no means a trifle.

There were other ways in which a careful housekeeper is able to limit expense, which Mrs. Newton did not overlook. With an object in view she was always on the lookout to prevent waist, and to get the full value of whatever was expended.

The result was beyond her anticipations.

At the close of the year, on examining her bank book—for she had regularly deposited whatever money she had not occasion to use in one of these institutions—she found she had one hundred and fifty dollars, beside reimbursing herself for the money used during the first month, and having enough to last another.

'Well, Elizabeth, have you kept within your allowance,' asked her husband at this time. 'I guess you have thought for.'

'I have saved something, however,' said his wife. 'But how is it with you?'

'That's more than I can say. However, I have not exceeded my income, that's one good thing. We have lived full as well, and don't know but better than last year, when we spent five-hundred.'

'It's knack, Ezra,' said his wife, smiling.

She was not inclined to mention how much she had saved. She wanted, some time or other, to surprise him with it when it would be of some service.

'She may possibly have saved up twenty-five dollars,' thought Mr. Newton, 'or some such trifle,' and so dismissed the matter from his mind.

At the end of the second year, Mrs. Newton's savings, including the interest, amounted to three hundred and fifty dollars, and she began to feel quite rich.

Her husband did not think to inquire how she had succeeded, supposing, as before, that it could be but a very small sum.

However, he had a piece of good news to communicate. His salary had been raised from a thousand to twelve hundred dollars. He added:

'As I before allowed you one-half my income for household expenses, it is no more than fair I should do so now. That will give you a better chance to save part of it than before. Indeed, I don't know you have succeeded in saving thus far.'

As before, Mrs. Newton merely said that she had saved something, without specifying the amount.

Her allowance was increased to six hundred dollars, but expences were not proportionally increased at all; so that her savings for the third year swelled the aggregate sum in the savings bank to six hundred dollars.

Mr. Newton, on the contrary, in spite of his increased salary, was no better off at the end of the third year than before. His expenses had increased by a hundred dollars, though he would have found it difficult to tell in what way his comfort or happiness had been increased therby. In spite of his carelessness in regard to business, and his services were valuable to his employer. They accordingly increased his salary from time to time till it reached sixteen hundred dollars. He had steadily preserved the custom of assigning one-half to his wife for the same purpose as heretofore, and this had become such a habit that he never thought to inquire whether she found it necessary to employ the whole or not

Thus ten years rolled away. During all this time Mr. Newton lived in the same hired house, for which he paid an annual rent of one hundred and fifty dollars. Latterly, however, he had become dissatisfied with it. It had passed into the hands of a new landlord, who was not disposed to keep it in the repair which he considered desirable.

About this time a block of excellent houses were selected by a capitalist, who designed to sell or let them as he might have opportunity. They were more modern and better arranged than the one in which Mr. Newton now lived, and he felt a strong desire to move into one of them. He mentioned it to his wife one morning.

'What is the rent, Ezra?' inquired she.

'Two hundred and twenty-five dollars for the corner house; two hundred for either of the others.'

'The corner of one would be preferable on account of the side windows.'

'Yes, and they have a large yard besides. I think we must hire one today; you know our year is out next week.'

'Please wait, Ezra, till to-morrow before engaging one.'

'For what reason?'

'I should like to examine the house.'

'Very well, I suppose to-morrow will be sufficently early.'

Soon after breakfast Mrs. Newton called on Squire Bent, the owner of the new block, and intimated her desire to be shown the corner house. The request he readily complied with; Mrs. Newton was delighted with all the arrangements, and expressed her satisfaction.

'Are these houses for sale or rent?' she inquired.

'Either,' said the owner.

'The rent is, I understand, two hundred and twenty-five dollars.'

'Yes, I considered the corner house worth at least twenty-five dollars more than the rest.'

'And what do you charge for the house to a cash purchaser?' asked Mrs. Newton with subdued eagerness.

'Four thousand dollars cash,' was the reply, 'and that is but a small advance on the cost.'

'Very well I will buy it of you,' added Mrs. Newton quietly.

'What did I understand you to say?' asked the Squire, scarcely believing his ears.

'I repeat that I will buy this house at your price, and pay the money within a week.'

'Then the house is yours. But your husband said nothing of his intentions.

'That he had the money to invest, I suppose you would say. Neither does he know it, and I must ask you not to tell him for the present.'

The next morning Mrs. Newton invited her husband to take a walk, but without specifying the direction.

They stood in front of the house in which he desired to live.

'Wouldn't you like to go in?' she asked.

'Yes. It's a pity we haven't got the key.'

'I have got the key,' said his wife, and fourtwith walked up to the steps and proceeded to open the door.

'When did you get the key of Squire Bent?' asked the husband.

'Yesterday, when I bought the house,' said his wife quietly.

Mr. Newton gazed on his wife in profound astonishment.

'What on earth do you mean, Elizabeth?' he inquired.

'Just what I say. The house is mine, and what is mine is thine. So the house is yours, Ezra.'

'Where in the name of goodness did you raise the money?' asked the husband, his amazement as great as ever.

'I haven't been a managing wife for ten years for nothing,' said Mrs. Newton smiling.

With some difficulty Mrs. Newton persuaded her husband that the price of the house was result of her savings. He felt when he surveyed the commodious arrangements of the new house, that he had reasons to be grateful for the prudence of his managing wife.

A parallel for the fate of Vallandigham is found in one of Baccacio's stories of a girl and her lover. 'They were in a garden together; the young man raised a flower to his lips and slightly bit one of the leaves; he fell; in an instant he was dead. She was accused of poisoning the man she loved best on earth besought her judges to be allowed to revisit the fatal garden, promising that she would show them how the thing was done. They granted her prayer. 'It was thus,' she said plucking a flower. She put it to her lips; her teeth just pressed the leaf; in an instant she was dead. So Vallandigham, in attempting to demonstrate how a man had been killed, succeeded only in inflicting death upon himself.'

A farmer cut down a tree which stood near the boundary line of his farm, that it was doubted whether it belonged to him or to his neighbor. The neighbor, however, claimed the tree, and prosecuted for damages the man who cut it. The case was sent from court to court. Time was wasted, temper soured, and friendship lost; but the case was finally gained by the prosecutor. The last we heard of the transaction was that the man who gained the case went to the lawyer's office to execute a deed of his whole farm, which he had been compelled to sell to pay his costs. Then, houseless, homeless, he thrust his hands into his pockets and triumphantly exclaimed 'I've beat him!'

Few men have had so varied and sad an experience in pursuit of wedded bliss as Mr Francis, of Albany. His first wife killed herself thirty-four years ago; nine years after, his second spouse ran away from him; six years latter, his third consort was drowned. In 1858 his fourth helpmate was killed, and he, having been convicted of murder, was sent to prison for life, but pardoned out. In another decade the fifth partner of his bosom mysteriously disappeared; and very recently the sixth weded idol of his soul sought peace and oblivion by hanging herself to a bedpost. It would be unreasonable to suppose, after all this, that the old man

The Bed of the Ocean.

It has been definitely ascertained that the greatest depth of the ocean does not reach 3,000 fathoms in any part where telegraph lines have been laid. The bed of the North Atlantic consists of two valleys, the eastern extending from 10 to 30°, the western from 30 to 50° west longitude. The extreme depth of the eastern valley is under 13,000 feet, which is less than the altitude of Monte Rosa. This valley has been traced southward to the equator. It is separated from the western valley by a ridge in 30° west longitude, in which the average depth is only 1,600 fathoms. This ridge terminates to the north in Iceland, and southward to the Azores, so that it is volcanic in its character at both extremities. Its extreme breath appears to be under 500 miles, and the Atlantic deepens from it on both sides. Exploration carried on in the Mediterranean, the Red Sea, and the Indian Ocean, showed similar uniformity in the level sea bottom; and the general conclusions arrived at by Captain Osborn were that in the deep sea there is an absence of bare rock, and that there are no rough ridges, canons, or abrupt chasms. Moreover, that the bed of the deep sea is not affected by current or streams, even by those of such magnitude as the Gulf Stream; but rather resemble the prairies or pampas of the American continent and is everywhere covered with a sort of ooze or mud, the debris of the lower forms of organic life.

Not Dead—Neither Does it Sleep.

To correct the wrong impression of a few Republican papers as to the demise of the Democratic party, we place before them the following opinions from the Republican party:

The Democratic party to-day is stronger than it ever was in its history. It means now to win, and I do not say that it cannot win.—Horace Greeley, at Vicksburg.

You may make light of the Democracy, but to-day, in the State of New York, there is a clear Democratic majority of ninety thousand. We never did [illegible] including all the Germans—New York Times, Radical.

Grant, with his Ku Klux bill, thinks he can kill the Democracy. It will take more men by a million, than he had at Appomatox.—New York Sun, Radical.

A great deal has been said about the dead Democracy. Those who think it is dead surely never read the story of the resurrection. There will be signs in the heavens and on the earth in 1872 when this Democratic party puts its soldiers in the field.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican, Radical.

He is a fool or a traitor who expects to win an easy victory over the Democratic party in 1872. Grant can never do it with the bayonet.—New York Evening Post, Radical.

They may say what they please, but those who are the most confident do not know these Democrats. They are the most dangerous when they seem the most whipped. Do not put any faith in them and do not trust them. In retreat they are treacherous and often fatal.—Louisville Commercial Radical.

Among the odd sights that attract the attention of a visitor in Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, is that of the natives carrying hay or grass about the streets. At each end of the carrying stick, or mamaka, as it is called—commonly used by them to carry their burdens—is a cylinder of hay about five feet long, artistically tied around with rush strings. These bundles will weigh anywhere from six or eight to twenty-five pounds, varying as the weather is stormy or fair, but always sold at the fixed price of 25 cents a bundle more or less, good or bad. The custom of the place is to buy from day to day the supply for a horse, as the day's milk is bought. When a cold storm intervenes and continues for several days, few sellers and small bundles are seen, and horses must go on short commons. At times it comes to hay famine. If the hay merchant finds the market brisk and his bundle pretty large, he will not unfrequently stop on the road and make one bundle into two.

ALREADY outside of the Republican party, so far that they have ceased to endeavor to influence its course, stand three distinct elements, each embracing many voters. In all the Western States the German Republicans have formed an important part of the strength of that party; to-day they stand aloof. Throughout the country free-trade Republicans from a strong minority, acting with that party as long as questions of the war remained unsettled, but resolved to assert their principles as soon as these questions can be put out of the way. In all Northern States a considerable body of men educated in the Democratic faith have sustained the Republican party in the prosecution of the war and the use of extreme measures in reaching a settlement of war issues, but the rapid centralization of power, the growing disregard of constitutional limitations, the steady encroachments of Federal authority upon the legitimate sphere of local self government, have roused them to the necessity of arresting the revolution before it culminates in despotism. Without the aid of one of these elements Grant will be defeated. He can gain

Famine has carried off thousands of Persians, and now cholera has become an epidemic among those who have escaped starvation, and is making great ravages. This was not unexpected. Famine is almost invariably followed by a destructive malady. The system is reduced by poor and scanty food to that condition most favorable for the attacks of disease, and in this instance the deaths occurred in such numbers that bodies lay unburied along the street where they fell, decaying and breeding pestilence. The cable has not informed us whether the famine is at an end. At last accounts the distressed people were selling their children into slavery to save them.

There is a report that the San Domingo business will be brought up for the consideration of the Senate immediately on the assembling of that body in the autumn.

A DIPLOMATIC FOOL.

The Hong Kong News Letter of June 12th has the following: The American residents in China have received with astonishment the announcement that Minister Low, before departing for Corea, had appointed a foreigner as Acting United States Consul for the port of Chiefo. So much dissatisfaction has been felt with the fact that an Englishman was holding the office of United States Vice-Consul at Tientsin, that it was generally believed some steps would be taken to replace him by an American born, but instead of this another one has been added to the list, much to the surprise of every one possessing the least particle of national pride. The Americans see with the deepest feelings of humiliation their flag represented at the capital of this country by foreigners—men who can have no interest in the affairs of the country they are thus appointed to represent.

The Right Doctrine.

The late Democratic Convention of Kentucky, which represented nearly all the white people of that State, adopted a declaration of principles, which declares, among other Democratic doctrines, that the Democratic party of the State pledges itself to put down all infraction of the law, whether Ku-Klux or otherwise, by the power of the State Courts, and the stern administration of the State laws. This is the legitimate and only Constitutional method by which such offenses can be dealt with. The State laws have always been competent to do this in the past, and can be trusted for the future. The position assumed by the Democrats of Kentucky on this subject, illustrates what has always been manifest to unprejudiced men, that all parties in the South condemn lawlessness, by whomsoever committed, and are ready to put it down without need of federal intervention.

The Campaign in Ohio.

The campaign in Ohio has opened brilliantly on the part of the Democracy, and the belief that they will carry the State, by a decisive majority, is gaining confidence every day. Meetings are announced in every county in the State, from now up to the day of election. Colonel Geo. W. McCook, the gallant standard bearer for Governor, is announced to address 43 meetings; Hon George H. Pendleton 20 meetings; General Morgan 41 meetings; General Ewing 20 meetings: Col. J. R. Cockerill, our candidate for Auditor of State, 22 meetings; E. C. Wallace our candidate for Attorney General 5 meetings; Hon. S. F. Hunt, the eloquent young candidate for Lieut. Governor, 17 meetings; Judge Thurman, 4 meetings, &c., &c.

The State Printing Imbroglio.

Some weeks ago the Journal of this city published an exhibit of the State Printer's drafts upon the Treasury, since his accession to office, making a show of at least a very liberal use of money by that gentleman, and leaving an impression that if there was such a thing as "skinning a black cat to the tail," he was in about as fair a way to do it as it is given to mortal hopes to attain into. The case was one that really demanded an explanation, and we are not disposed to believe that an honorable explanation was impossible. But the Printer, either because he deemed the charge frivolous, or because it was more trouble to explain than he cared to take, refused to explain. He derided the accusation of malversation, and obscurely hinted his purpose to get out of his office all that was legally or illegally in it. When a man charged with peculation and confronted with documentary evidence giving color to the charge, replies that when he "gets a black cat he means to skin it to the tail," he leaves fair room for the worst interpretation of his past conduct and future purposes. It is no way for a man to do who respects himself or public opinion. An honorable man is worth a word of defence from a plausible charge however frivolous. Mr. Bright would make none against a very serious charge. As we have said, we do not, on this account, conclude that he had none to make, but rather that he felt disposed to defy the Journal and see it "rave." But here he made a sad mistake, and we have no doubt he feels it by his time. Facts, and facts sworn to by the accused himself, are things that take the public judgment along with them rapidly, and the Journal's statement has brought upon Mr. Bright the persistent and vigorous attacks of several of the ablest Democratic papers in the State, abler than the Sentinel by all odds, and only less prominent because located at less commanding points. They demanded an explanation of him. They claimed that it was due to the party, which went into power pledged to economy and reform, to clear up plausible accusations of official misconduct. But he paid as little regard to them as to the Journal. The latter charged him directly with criminal misconduct, and dared him to sue for libel. But this was as ineffective as all the rest. His position was far from enviable. Charged with crime, comforted with what seemed like direct proofs, defied to resort to legal remedies, assailed by his own partisans, believed guilty by the very many, his worst enemy could have wished him nothing worse than remain as he was, unassailed by the law, undefended by anybody. And it was a position of his own choosing.

But now comes the editor of the Journal, and because he cannot drive Mr. Bright into a defence that no Republican ought to want to have him make—for any defence at all would be good with his partisans—he makes affidavit to a charge of perjury in swearing to printing bills, and has Mr. Bright arrested. On Thursday at 11 o'clock A. M. the trial was appointed before Justice Fisher. Mr. Bright, by his counsel, appeared, waived an examination and gave bond in $500 to answer at the coming session of the Criminal Court. There the matter rests for the present. The first effect of the prosecution is a decided impression that the Journal management has made an egregious blunder. 1st, Because, in a party aspect, the case as it stood, was in worst possible shape for Mr. Bright, and for his party if it did not repudiate him. That was the "fix" to leave him in. To drive him out of it, with no certainty of driving him out into a worse one, anybody can see is a mistake, and Mr. Fishback has no certainty of convicting him, which is the only "fix" that can be worse. The chances are more than even that he will be driven to an exculpation, and the Journal's generalship will have achieved a splendid defeat of its own campaign.

2d. Because it may not be hard to show that Mr. Bright's predecessors have set him the example of the conduct now arraigned as criminal. His offense is that on the 6th of March he swore that the State was indebted to him for $6,900 worth of book paper, and the State was not so indebted, and Mr. Bright knew it, swears Mr Fishback. In this operation Mr. Bright seemed to have done no criminal, though certainly not a strictly legal, thing. He swore to have used paper that he expected to use, and drew it, or the money for it, in advance. This is clearly contrary to the spirit of the law of 1856. But if illegal, the Secretary of State shares the guilt, as paper can only be obtained by the Printer from him, or by his consent. But whether the oath was perjury or not depends on its intent. If it was meant only to procure paper money, for future use, and this has been the practice in the office, certainly no corrupt or perjured intent inheres in the act. He did what those before him had been in the habit of doing, to get what he would need for his official work. Can it be shown that his predecessors have made similar oaths for similar ends; that this has been the practice of the office? If it can, that will put an end to the perjury business, and if he is acquitted, the Journal will "hoist with its own petard" with as unpleasant a degree of violence as we ever remember to have seen that little backaction operation performed.

3d. Besides forcing Mr Bright into a probably better position, and involving a very fair prospect of his acquittal of all perjured intent on the ground that he was doing only what had been the custom of his office, the prosecution is a blunder for the reason that it may force out certain Republican printing operations that will count as many "dozens" for the Democracy as all that can be made of Bright will count for the Republicans. The two years' careful silence of the Sentinel as to all State Printing matters, however obtained—and it is more than hinted that it was bought and paid for—has a queer look. The popular talk of a "tunnel" from one office to the other was not without meaning. Now if Mr. Bright's prosecution forces out an explanation of all these things, and compels an overhauling of the accounts back to 1867, it is not improbable that the exposition will leave the Republicans with the heavier load of the two. In that case this criminal proceeding will prove a very bad speculation. There is no aspect of it that does not show it to be a blunder, a probable scource of annoyance or worse to the Republican party, and a probable relief of the Democrats from all the annoyance they now feel, and feel keenly, on Mr. Bright's account. We may except a conviction from this summing up. If Mr. Bright's is convicted and sent to Jeffersonville, we will allow that the Journal management have judged wisely, better than we should have done. But if he is not, those managers may lay their account to smell more Republican brimstone than will be good for their lungs. And we don't believe he will be convicted, simply because we don't believe he is guilty of more than following a bad example with no criminal intent.

A Ferry Boat Loaded With Passengers Explodes her Boiler—Over Thirty-five Killed and One Hundred Wounded.

New York, July 26.—The Staten Island ferry boat Westfield, while in the slip at Whitehall street and crowded with passengers, exploded her boiler at 1:20 this afternoon. The concussion was terrific, shattering the forward part of the boat and killing and scalding a great number of people. The hurrican deck was carried overboard and fell over a great number of persons in the water, who were drowned. The scene was beyond description. Men were struck dumb by the loss of their wives and little ones, and women distracted, having lost their husbands, and children crying for their parents. The front of the boiler was suddenly blown out, lodging in the bow, thirty feet distant. The forward part of the boat and upper cabin were instantly shivered and split into a thousand pieces, as and eye witness expressed it. The forward part of the boat was lifted fifty feet in the air. The smoke stack fell and then everybody was buried in the hold passengers, chairs, stools, horses, benches and life preservers dropping into the hold fronting the huge boiler which poured upon them a deadly steam. Many per- persons were blown overboard. A father and mother had their children blown from their arms. The water in an instant was alive with men, women and children struggling for life. The rear part of the boat, which had escaped the force of the explosion, would have been safe for the uninjured, but they were panic-stricken and leaped overboard regardless of consequences Capt. Ullman, of the new street police, hearing the explosion was promptly on hand. The fire alarm was sounded, and Dr. Shire was at the scene of disaster in ten minutes, well provided with medicines and bandage. Cool calculated he saved several lives by his prudence. Within twenty minutes Inspector Jameson was on the ground directing the efforts of the police and keeping back the multitude who were crowding the harbor. The police boat came to the rescue, and some gentlemen who were in a row boat near the battery, saved some lives. The firemen also went to the rescue, and bravely did their work. The debris in the fore part of the hold, was first removen, and the cries of the poor half-boiled victims were heartrending. Stimulants were given them as they struggled beneath the beams, and oil was poured upon their burns. As fast as the wounded recovered, they were bourne to the deck. Another ferry boat moored along side, where they were tenderly cared for by Dr. Shire. Within twenty minutes ambulances from the Centre street hospital were at Whitehall. The victims were placed in ambulances and driven to the hospital at full speed. Private carriages and express wagons were also brought into requisition. The insurance patrol wagon bore several loads of moving beings to the hospital. Some died on the way; others were delirious with pain. One ambulance was filled with children whose eyes were closed and their whole face swelled beyond recognition. Their feet and legs were cooked and their tender muscles laid bare. By four o'clock over seventy wounded persons had been received in the Center Street Hospital. Five died there within an hour. Twelve dead bodies were removed from the boat, four have since been found in the water, and five have died, making as far as known, twenty-one persons killed nearly outright. Many of those in the water clung to the piles until they were rescued, but others sank before aid could reach them. At least thirty-five persons must have been killed and drowned. This basing in on the lowest estimate. The wounded will reach one hundrd.

The following is the statement of Robinson, the engineer, made to-day:

I lived in Stapleton, Staten Island; am about forty years of age and have been fireman for twenty years; have been employed by the company sixteen years. I did not bring my certificate to the company, for the company did require it on this ferry; had entire charge of the Westfield boat, which is a half-hour boat; run on Sundays between regular trips; was on the boat when the explosion occured; I had just come off the deck; it was then twenty-five minutes after one; Pat Fennegan, one of the engineers was in the room I said, "Pat., how is the water?" and he replied "all right." At this time I approached the boiler and tried the third cock; found that water touched the third cock. The boiler has only three cocks. I then went up to the engine room, and passing the door went in and found the boiler was carrying twenty-seven pounds of steam. Then I went on the dock and in two minutes after I went on the boat and in the pilot-house. The Captain was in there at the time. Just as I was going down stairs into the engine room the explosion took place. From where I stood I knew I could not get through the door, so I opened the trap door and as I did so I saw the fireman, Robert Crawson, coming up the trap. The boiler has been in use nine years; it was a good boiler; I cannot say what caused the explosion. The boiler had a patch on the cylinder on the part where the explosion occurred. The boiler was overhauled last winter; in fact, the boilers of both the Westfield and Northfield. I examined the patch on Thursday last, and it seemed to be in the good condition. I went on duty at noon. I relieved the engineer, Robert Brown.

One of the victims is Antonie Meucci, partner of Garibaldi in his candle factory at Clifton, Staten Island. The poor fellow is shockingly bruised and can't move a muscle without suffering the greatest agony. He was borne to his residence by his friends, when a physician at once pronounced the injuries undoubtedly fatal. Meucci sacrificed all his wealth in aiding poor Italian emigrants who come to this country. He is Garibaldi's most intimate friend.

LATER.

The World publishes the names of seventy-one killed by the explosion and says there are eight bodies unidentified.

The Herald gives the number of killed even greater and publishes the names of one hundred and twenty-seven injured. It also published the names of the majority of killed and wounded from this city, Brooklyn and Staten Island. It is believed that many more bodies will be taken out of the water, and of course there are others that never will be found.

The most painful affair of this fearful tragedy is the appearance of anxious and half crazy people at the hospitals and station houses inquiring after missing friend and relatives. One poor fellow, Michael Finlay, who lost his his wife and child by the explosion has gone mad and attempted yesterday to commit suicide by throwing himself into the East river.

The terrible conviction is settling itself on the people that the holocaust is yet more awful than has even been suspected. Several bodies have been taken out of the water this morning, making ninety-seven in all. It is said by those best informed that the number injured will exceed two hundred.

The secretary of the Staten Island Ferry Company stated, yesterday, that it was yet impossible to account for the accident. The Inspector of the Company held a rigid cross examination of the engineer, fireman, captain and pilot, and he cannot attach the slightest blame to any of the officers. This statement however, must be taken for what it is worth.

Thomas Powers, Locomotive Boiler Inspector, yesterday examined the boiler of the Westfield and says:

The explosion, in my opinion, occurred from an over pressure of steam, as there is no appearance of low water, but on the contrary there is every evidence of there having been plenty of water in the boiler.

The Way the Tide Runs.

No paper in the United states watches the political tide more closely than the New York Herald. It affects independence in politics; but was a strong advocate of the election of General Grant to the Presidency and has supported his administration warmly since; but it is not the paper to adhere to the fortunes of an administration when they are manifestly on the decline. It does not subsist on Federal patronage; it subsists on the patronage of the people, and consequently it seeks to shape its course their acceptance. In an editorial on the 6th of July, on "the Presidential election in 1872— the chance for the Democrats —" it uses this language:

"Notwithstanding the powerful position the radical party occupied, intrenched and fortified every way, and the depressed condition of the democratic party two or three years ago, the latter has been gaining ground and the former losing. We see this in the largely increased number of Democrats in the present Congress as compared with the last. Besides the largest representation in the house there are more democratic Senators. Then several of the Northern State governments as well as that of New York, have been recovered by the Democrats, and even where the Radicals still retain power the elections lately have generally been more favorable to the Democrats. In fact the tide has been setting that way since a short time after Genearl Grant took his seat in the White House. Most of the Southern States have gone back to their old love The democratic party, in spite of the extraordinary and reprehensible efforts made by the radicals to hold them. And now comes the new movement—the "new departure" of the lamented Vallandigham—the reconstruction of the party upon a broad and more liberal platform. This, evidently, is making the dry bones of the politicians shake. It brings into discussion fresh issues and tends to over shadow those of the war upon which the radicals have relied and on which they still mainly rely. It alarms the radical party and inspires the Democrats with hope.

"The fact is," said a middle aged wife, "a man does not know how to straighten up things. He does not know how to push himself ahead. He does not know how to begin, I don't wonder," she remarked in conclusion, "that when God made Adam he went right to work and made a woman to tell him what to do."

President Grant stills remains at Long Branch, the chief among ten thousand office-seekers, and the one altogether most susceptible of receiving gifts. He smokes cigars in twelve different languages, and discusses the noble equine from a race-course standpoint. The paramount idea in his brain is the San Domingo swindle. He regards it as the crowning glory of his administration, and well he may, for it will net him about ten millions of dollars.

The Presidential Outlook.

The St. Louis Times in discussing the prospects of the Democracy in the approaching Presidential election, urges as a necessity to success, that there should be the most complete unanimity as to men and measure. It says:

"The party stands, it is true, upon the confines of victory; it is drawing near to its new era of supremacy in the government, as we believe, but it still hangs by a dangerous thread over the declivity of defeat, and imprudent counsels may yet disappoint our own and the hopes of the country. Without the most complete unanimity as to men and measures, the field is not to be mastered. The enemy whom we so much despise, and in whom we detect so many elements of weakness, has yet those elements of strength that, as before, may possibly be found again insuperable. He has at his control the principle means which the Democracy have not, wherewith to accomplish his purpose and sway the popular will. He has army, treasury, patronage—unlimited resources, as it were—to use; and we know but to well how the best and noblest of principles are often thrown into perilous and unequal contest, when pitted against the force bills and corruption funds of a government at the zenith of its power.

"The prospect is one to cheer and encourage. There is scarcely a reason to doubt the results of the contest, if Democrats but realize as they ought the necessity of union, the value of discretion, and in view of public needs that press upon the people, the essential importance of letting go by the board all minor differences as to person or section among themselves, and all past issues that have been fought over with the Radical party, for the great and only object of redeeming the country to honester, safer and wiser statesmanship.

David Butler was the Governor of Nebraska. He was impeached and removed from office for embezzling the State funds. Since then David has shown talent worthy of the immortal Benjamin of Essex. Two men named Gere and Bramlee are the owners of a newspaper in Lincoln, Nebraska. David Butler went up among their friends and proposed the presentation of a silver service to the newspaper proprietors. About seventy-five persons responded. Gere and Bramlee were invited to a banquet. Before the feast David arose and in a most affectionate speech presented to them a dilapidated pitcher of britannia ware well burnished up, and a brace of goblets to match. The newspaper men seemed overjoyed. They laid the testimonial carefully away and then went to supper. During the supper David went around with a subscription paper and raised a little over hundred dollars to pay for the present. Everybody was delighted, and so was David. It afterward turned out that the pitcher and the goblets belonged to the ex-Governor himself, and that the orriginal cost was just twenty dollars.

Benjamin of Essex should now try his hand at a spoon presentation.

SAYS a New York paper of Friday: Frenchmen almost forgot the recent military humiliation of their country in the grand review yesterday at Longchamps, in the suburbs of Paris. The troops, one hundred thousand strong and under command of Marshal MacMahon, were reviewed by President Theirs. They looked finely, showed much enthusiasm, and repeatedly cheered the President. Military medals were conferred on Generals Vinoy and Ladmirault, and a large number of promotions in the Legion of Honor were announced. All Paris was at the show. The grounds were thronged with an immense number of people and carriages, and the scenes were excedingly brilliant. A nation which recovers its elasticity of spirits in this rapid manner can hardly said to be effete. Another gratifying evidence of the national spirit is the eagerness with which the new government loan has been taken by the people. The Finance Minister announces that the government will not wait for the dates fixed by the Frankfort treaty for paying the German indemnity, but will hasten the deliverance of the country at once.

Our shootists will govern themselves by the following laws prescribed for protection of game: A violation subjects the offender to a fine and payment of the costs of prosecution; Wild Duck, between March 1st and October 15th; Prairie Chickens, between Febuary 1st and November 1st. Lark and Killdeer between Febuary 1st and October 1st; Woodcock, between Febuary 1st and July 4th. It is unlawful to trap Quail at any time or to destroy in any manner or at any time the following birds: Sparrow, Robin, Red-bird, Blue-bird, Martin, Thrush, Mocking-bird, Swallow, Oriole, Cat-bird, Chewink, Kingbird, Bobolink, Yellow-bird, Peewee, Wren, Cuckoo, Indigo-bird, Nubleatch, Creeper, Flicker, Warbler or Finch.

A Boston paper says: "A horse ran away yesterday, and a doctor ran, and the coroner ran. The horse fell, the rider was unhurt, the doctor had no case, the coroner no fee, the reporter had this paragraph, and that was all that came of the runaway."

T. Stanfield Tailor, of Fort Wayne, has written a romance for the Journal entitled "The Local Satin." It is said to be devilish good.

The Juinor club of Butler paid us a visit yesterday, and cleaned out our Juveniles by an excess of three tallies. They played well and acted like little gentlemen.

PERSONAL.—Hon. B. P. Loomis, President of the Fort Wayne Jackson & Saginaw Railroad, was a guest at the Weaver House last night.

BONNETS for next fall and winter are to have a wide, box-plaited curtain or cape at the back, which will completely hide the back hair.

THE EXCURSION.—When will our exchanges get through talking about that excursion to Nebraska. For an example of indiscriminate puffing, they can't be beat. Give us a rest.

A FENIAN over the water was called on for a toast. He gave the following:

> All hail! the American aigle!
> Proud bird of freedom, all hail!
> The fowl that no one can invigle,
> Or put salt on its beautiful tail!"

Arbuckle's Roasted Coffee, at Smith & Hare's.

THE Rochester Union Spy has been enlarged to a six column quarto. Fulton county is now supplied with two first-class papers, representing both parties. We think a change in the name of the above paper would not be a bad idea.

RECREATION of some kind is a good thing for those engaged in hard labor either mental or physical, yet no young man need ever expect to rise above mediocrity if he devotes one-third of his time to work while two-thirds are spent in seeking pleasure.

SHINGLE FACTORY.—Mr. Hollopeter is enlarging his shingle factory, and will soon have facilities for their manufacture not equaled in the country. Thats right extend your manufactories and get new ones located here. They build up a town more substantially and with greater rapidity than anything else.

A CERTAIN young gentlemen, while riding with a young lady a few days since, was suddenly reminded by her that she was on the right side of the vehicle instead of the left, as is usual. The intelligent youth in order to correct his mistake immediately turned the horses and buggy completely around and drove in the opposite direction. Fact!

NEW TIN SHOP.—That capitol mechanic, S. E. Long, Esq, of Waterloo, has started in business for himself. He has just recently furnished and equiped a first-class tin shop, in that place, first door north of Till's boot and shoe store, where the public will find him prepared to respond to their call for goods in his line. All work warranted.

A physician of great note has said, "tobacco has a tendency to soften and weaken the bones of young people: it greatly injures the brain and spinal marrow and in fact the whole nervous fluid. A boy who smokes frequently or in any way uses tobacco constantly, is never known to make a man of much energy, and generally lacks muscular as well as mental power,"

H. C. PETERSON, ESQ., one of our accomplished young attorneys, formerly with D. D. Moody, Esq., announces through his card in to-days paper, that he is at the service of those who may need legal assistance. Mr. P. is a gentleman of considerable ability having already had the benefit of several years experience at the bar, and we are confident that he will meet the expectations of those who may employ him.

NEW DRY GOODS STORE.—W. H. McQinston, Esq., recently connected with the dry goods trade at Fort Wayne, is now putting in a large stock in the store room under the COURIER office and intends making one of the finest displays in this line ever offered to the public. A car load of goods arrived yesterday, and he will be ready for business by the end of the week. Our farmer friends should not fail to see the new stock.

NEW BRICK BLOCK.—A new brick block will be commenced this fall, on Seventh-st. north of the Court House. It will be eighty feet long, ninety feet front, and three stories high, containing four store rooms. If everything is favorable the brick will be placed in position this fall. This will be one of the most valuable improvements recently made to our place and we are glad to see this spirit of enterprise awakening in our midst.

> "And the star spangled banner
> In triumph shall wave
> O'er the land of the free
> And the home of the brave."

Thus sang the patriot years ago but that has nothing to do with the large and varied assortment of perfumery, now to be found at Davenport's Drug Store.—He keeps the only genuine article, at prices cheaper than the cheapest. If you want a nice good article go to Davenport's and you will get what you desire.

Who would have believed there is a county in Ohio without a grog-shop? The county of Noble has not a grog-shop within its border, everyone having been abated during the past year. And the Temperance people who have accomplished this reform have the good sense not to mix the matter with politics, but they labor for the Temperance cause within existing lines of party politics.—Minerva Commer.

THE WHEAT TRADE.—Our accomplished and experienced farmer friend, James Dragoo, tried his hand yesterday in purchasing wheat, on our streets. His market being Toledo, where the prices have rated higher for a day or so past than at Detroit, he found that he could pay a few cents more than the ruling rate here, and have it hauled to Waterloo. This did not exactly suit our wheat merchants and they advanced the price so as to have it delivered here. The result was that but little went away. As the markets vary between Toledo and Detroit so they will vary between Auburn and Waterloo.

BRICK.—The brick yards south of town present a scene of great activity, and we learn that about 300,000 brick will be burnt next week. This will materially assist in building up our place, and there has been a great demand this year for brick, for various improvements. Many of our citizens now building would use this material, could it be obtained, at a reasonable cost. Several buildings of this kind, however, have been erected not withstanding the scarcity. About 800,000 brick will be made in these yards this season, most of which are already engaged for building purposes. Auburn is building up rapidly and we look ere long to see it made one of the most beautiful places in Northern Indiana.

Cistern Wanted.

The greatest want now felt in this place is a public fire cistern—a large one that will meet all demands in case of fire. What could we do in this dry weather, if a fire should break out, and no water to quench it? Stand and see your property burn up, simply because of the want of a cistern? We trust the Town Board will pay some attention to this matter at their next meeting, and decide to build one without the least possible delay. After this has been provided our citizens will be found willing to contribute more readily to other enterprises that will render us more safe from loss by fire.

CHEAP MUSIC.—It is seldon that cheapness is associated with merit and real value, but we must make an exception in favor of Peters' Musical Monthly. This valuable work comes to us regularly each month, overflowing with choice new music—some fifteen pieces in every number. It is printed from 36 full size music-plates neatly bound, and sells for the modest sum of 30 cents. Volume VIII. began with the July number; and the publisher offers to send two copies—July and August—for 50 cents. Address J. L. Peters' 599 Broadway, New York. Think of it! 30 pieces of good Music for 50 cents.

Not long since a young man of our acquaintance married a girl who, like himself, was poor. He left his old habits of dissipation and idleness, and now, with his really industrious and good wife, he is striving hard to secure a home. Yet had he the time and money he squandered before marriage, he might be comfortably situated. You may some day be in a like situation. Be warned in time, and for once realize the value of your time, help your fathers, learn a trade, study a profession or farming, do something, be in earnest about it, improve your leisure, especially your evenings, in reading and study, not altogether as a past time, but for improvement. If you do not reach eminence and fame, you will feel a conciousness of having done your best with such talents as were given you.

THE HARVEST.—The grain throughout the county has now about been all housed and though considerable damp weather prevailed of late it was secured in good condition. For once we hear of no murmuring about short crops. All the farmers unite in saying that they were never better—abundance of straw and grain.—The farmer is glad, and rejoices. Thankfullness fills his heart as he sees how a Providence has blessed his labors. Indeed, we think this abundant crop is cause for gratitude from all hearts. Not the farmer and laborer alone, but every class should be reminded of the preciousness and value to our whole country of this overflowing in-gathering. Our granaries will be loaded with wheat and rye, and barley and oats, and our corn fields never looked better than they do at the present time.

A NUISANCE.—That classic institution, known as the Auburn Brewery, is fast sinking into the condition of a common "doggery," and complaints are numerous and frequent as to the manner in which it is being conducted. Every hardened drunkard in this locality finds favor with the proprietor, and as a last resort, when no one else will harbor them or give them to drink, they repair to this miserable abode to spend their last cent in the villainous stuff that steals away their brains Not only do old bummers congregate there but our boys and young men have been know to visit it and leave again in a beastly state of intoxication. Last Saturday night several of them came down the street, acting like crazy beings, after having drank to excess at this establishment. Unless this nuisance is abated we look for the citizens to take the matter in to their own hand and apply the proper remedy.

Send Us Local Items.

We desire our friends in all parts of the county and country to supply us with such local matters as may transpire in their neighborhoods. Anything that is of sufficient importance to constitute neighborhood gossip, such as accidents of all kinds, condition of crops, deaths, marriages, public meetings, individual and public enterprises, educational and religious items, proceedings of literary societies, good jokes, rich sells, remarkable specimens of minerals, of aricultural productions, of mechanical skill, of live stock of any kind, extreme cases of longevity in man or beast, and ten thousand and one other things which go to make up the current daily conversation of neighbor with neighbor, make interesting items for the public, and create a demand for the paper containg them. Send us the facts; we will arrange them for the press. The name of the person sending us such information must always accompany it, as no attention is paid to anonymous communications, however, much they may contain of value. We do not ask for the name of the author with a view of making in public, if he prefers that we should not do so, but simply as a guarantee of good faith on his part, that the information be convey

THE FIRE AND OTHER FIENDS.

Last Thursday night, about eleven o'clock, the barn of Mr. King was consumed by fire together with a valuable horse, buggy and sleigh, for tons of hay, harness, etc. When the alarm was first given, the fire had gained such headway that no one thought of saving the building, and attention was given entirely to surrounding ones. An effort was made to get to the door to let the horse out, but the heat was too intense even for that. The animal struggled wildly but did not suffer long. The question of how it caught has not been directly answered yet, but it seems a pretty well settled opinion that it was the work of an incendiary. They may not have entertained any particular spite for Mr. King, but did it on the principal of general meaness. The loss is estimated at $500. No insurance.

The next day it was discoverad that an attempt had been made to fire the ware house in rear of Mr. Clotz' store, which, had it succeeded, would have resulted in the destruction of the entire block. A pine stick was found from which the shavings were made to start the fire. S. W. Ralston, Esq., took posession of it, and after a brief search found the piece from which it was broken, on the premises of one John Moore, a dissipated man of bad character. On being asked for his knife he denied he had one, but finally brought it fourth, and proved to be the one by which the whittling was done, as near as one could judge. Moore had been arrested a few days previous for various threats, but was out on bail by the very man whose ware house was chosen as the place to start the conflagation. He was delivered over to the Sheriff that night, Mr Clotz believing it safe to go bail no longer. He is certainly a desperate character, and whether guilty or not of this crime, he is not a safe man to let loose upon society. There is another character that is being closely watched to whom suspicion points as having something to do with this affair. Our citizens are on the alert, and are determined to ferve this thing out, if possible. Let every one be on the watch and make it hot for such criminals.

IMPROVEMENTS.—We can scarcely keep pace with the many improvements now going on in our place. It has been but few weeks since we gave a long list of the new buildings in course of construction, and now comes another. F. D. Ryan, our efficient county Treasurer, has the foundation laid for a fine new brick, just west of Auditor McIntyre's residence. G. C. Ralston, Esq., is gathering together the material for a good substantial frame in McFarland's addition, and expects to get into it this winter.

R. Elson, Esq., our enterprising dentist, who was burnt out a few months ago, is also engaged in the erection of a building that will be a credit to our place.

Mr. G. Porter, has also commenced the work of a new residence on south Jackson-st., which will be completed this fall.

A J. Little, Esq., has the frame of his new residence already in position, which, when completed will be quite an addition to that part of town.

Mr. Jacob Walborn is putting up a very neat residence on north Jackson-st., which will also be completed this fall.

Wm. Snell, is adding another story and wing to his house, on Main-st.

Mr. Lobmiller has his building under way, and a number of others are making preparations to assist in filling up the place with substantial dwellings.

A BEAUTIFUL CUSTOM.—A stranger remarked, the other day, that he was surprised to see hogs running loose through our streets and wallowing along the sidewalks to the disgust of every body. Not another place in the country of half the importance of Auburn, that permits this intolerable nuisance, and there is no reason why we should be so inflicted. This matter rests with our town board, and it is the only proper authority for the abatement of this nuisance. If our citizens wish to keep hogs, they should not expect to pasture them free upon the town, and allow them to litter up our sidewalks and pavements as they do. If they want to keep hogs, let them confine them to their pens, the most economical way of raising hogs, and if they can't do that let them sell out to those who can. For our part we are down on allowing these creatures to run at large, and pursue their usual avocation of wallowing in every puddle of water they find. A marked improvement to our place will be made when this object is accomplished. The idea of a county seat allowing hogs to root up our ground and scatter filth over our side walks is too disgusting to be entertained, and we hope the matter will be attended to.

FRUIT.—This season is emphatically the one that fruit abounds, and nature has so constituted the physical man that his appetite turns from carniverous to vegetable food.

The early springs bring in to life young and tender vegetables, and a variety of berries. They serve their place, and are superceded by some solid fruits, which suffice almost entirely for food.

The season of berries is about over, and now comes the peach and apple crop, the most important of our fruits. The peaches thus far in the market are from the South, and are packed in crates with slats that admit of ventilation. They are by this means transported in good order, and arrive here in the main as good as when shipped. The quality of southern peaches this year is hardly up to the standard. The crop is large one. West of the Mississippi river the attention paid to peach trees is so slight that this vast area of country enters to a small extent in the calculation of the crop of the United States. Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey are the most important States to be considered in determining the crop of the country and prices

CHEESE MANUFACTORY.—I am now manufacturing cheese for the trade, and have on hand a large lot, which I warrant good, not made of skimmed milk. My cows are fed on tame grass, clover and timothy and fresh pure water—no stagnant swamp water on the farm. I use Roe's patent premium cheese vat with improved heater, the best in the world, also Roe's improved ever and weight cheese press, patent expansion hoops, &c. I am now selling at 12 and 14 cents per pound. Dairy one-fourth mile south of Auburn, on the Fort Wayne road.

J. STAMETS.

TO THE TEACHERS OF DEKALB COUNTY.—The undersigned would respectfully call the attention of Teachers to the Examiner's Notice in this week's issue, and which will be kept standing in both county papers. Attention is also directed to the fact that the law allowing teachers to be excused from examination in History and Physiology, has been repealed, and therefore, such special licenses can be no longer granted. As the original act requiring a knowledge of these branches, was passed six years ago, it is believed that all have had ample opportunities for preparation, and have, consequently, no valid excuse for futher exemption.

Hoping that proper attention to these facts may save needless trouble to both Examiner and applicant, and that we may all labor diligently in the great work entrusted to our care, I remain

Respectfully, JAMES A. BARNS.

RAILROAD NEWS.—There seems to be a great dearth of anything pertaining to news of our projected Baltimore & Ohio Road, but the engineers are no doubt nearing the end of their laborious job, though we cannot tell in what locality they are at this writing. As the COURIER is the only paper on the line from Defiance to Chicago, we don't have many exchanges to clip from or report to give about the work at points west of us. We are in great hops, however, that everything is lovely, and working for our benefit and happiness.—Auburn Courier.

Only one paper—while on the northern line the papers number as follows, between Napoleon and Chicago: In Bryan, 2; Angola, 1; LaGrange, 1; Goshen, 2; Elkhart, 3; Mishawka, 1; South Bend 3; LaPorte, 3—total, 16. The northern route is a trifle ahead.—Goshen Democrat.

Yes, you're slightly ahead as far as your capacity for blowing is concerned, but we've got the inside track when the real merits of the line are compared. The shortest and easiest of construction, two essentials, that amount to more than the numerous blowing of many newspapers.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisments do so only to deceive the public. All persons should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to one house in Fort Wayne this fall. Most goods and lowest prices.

Aug 9.

ALL the clothing men are crying clothing is going up since the advance in war, but the popular Red Front Clothing House are selling goods cheaper than ever. We purchased our winter goods in May when they were very low, and will give our customers the advantage. Come and see us it No. 5 Keystone Block, Fort Wayne.

YOU can buy, at the popular Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block, Ft Wayne, Ind., good all wool casimere suits for ten dollars, better ones $15, and the best for $18. Call and see them.

HAVING a buyer in New York all the time buying goods for cash only, the Red Front Clothing House can substantiate all it advertises and sells good cheaper than other houses can buy them for.

Austin's ague drops, sold and warranted by DAVENPORT.

BURLINGTON.

Leaving the East and arriving at Chicago or Indianapolis, how shall we reach the West? The best Line is acknowledged to be the C., B. & Q. joined together with the Iron Bridge at Burlington, and called the BURLINGTON ROUTE.

The main line of the route running to Omaha, connects with the great Pacific Roads, and forms to-day the leading route to California. The Middle Branch, entering Nebraska at Plattsmouth, passes through Lincoln, the State Capitol, and will this year be finished to Fort Kearney, forming the shortest route across the Continent by over 100 miles.

Another branch of the B. M., diverging at Red Oak, falls into a line running down the Missouri through St. Joe to Kansas City, and all Kansas. Passengers by this route to Kansas, see Illinois, Southern Iowa, and Missouri, and, by slight divergence, can see Nebraska also.

Lovers of fine views should remember the Burlington Route, for its towns "high-gleaming from afar"—its tree-fringed streams—its rough bluffs and quarries—its corn-oceans stretching over the prairies further than eye can reach.

Land-buyers will be sure to remember it, for they have friends among the two thousand who have already bought farms from Geo. S. Harris, the Land Commissioner of the B. & M. R. R. at Burlington, Iowa, or among the four thousand home-steaders and pre-emptors who last year filed claims in the Lincoln land office, where "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm."

FACT.—The eclipse of the moon did not come to time, and a great many people were consequently disappointed; but those who go to the drug store of F. E. Davenport expecting to get a bargain are never disappointed; for he is just now giving such bargains as will satisfy any reasonable man.

An Irishman, when asked by a lady whether he would take a glass of sherry or a glass of whisky punch, answered that he would take the sherry while her ladyship was mixing the punch.

A gentleman traveling on a steamer one day at dinner was making away with a large pudding close by, when he was told by the servant that it was dessert. It matters not, he said, 'I would eat it if it were a wilderness.'

Billy Bray, of Illinois, threw a brick at the cow, but knocked down his sister; his father knocked him down with a spade; his mother kocked him down with a broomstick and the doctor who attended the family had to knock down on his charges.

Another Japanese prince has come. His name is Schmidzee, and his quality is that of a nephew of the late Tycoon. His purpose is to acquire a 'New England education,' which consists in the capacity to digest pumpkin pies, Ben. Butler's political morality, and the Atlantic Monthly.

The wedding ring is put on the fourth finger of the woman's hand because, in the original formulary of marriages, it was placed on top of the thumb with the words, 'In the name of our father,' then on the next finger with the words, 'and of the Son,' and on the middle finger with 'and of the Holy Ghost,' and finally on the fourth finger with the 'Amen.'

The Indian Peace Commissioners of the Mexican State of Sonora are engaged in a very active trade in Apache scalps at $200 apiece. They make peace with about a hundred a month in that way—which has the advantage over our system, that it involves no further payments of annuities or pensions, and that the State pays for only what it gets, instead of keeping an army that is never on hand where and when it it wanted.

The result of the census throughout Great Britain has just been officially announced. The entire population of England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, the channel islands, and the Isle of Man, including the army, navy, and merchant, marine abroad, is: Males, 15,549,371; females, 16,267,837; total, 31,509,910. The preponderance of females, over males is 718,568.

Benj. F. Butler, of New Orleans fame(?) is a candidate for the nomination of Governor of Massachusetts. He once upon a time, gave the press of that State a severe and scathing cut, and now he finds himself without an organ. Even the papers of his own political faith hint that it is best for him to "go slow, and learn to peddle," and not get worked up too much in regard to the nomination. It would seem that they are playing a game of "tit for tat" up there, and Butler may in the end get the worst of it.

The widow of ex-Governor Lucas of Ohio, [illegible] Iowa City, Iowa at the advanced age of seventy-six. Gov. Lucas was the President of the first national political convention that was ever held in the United States. It met at Baltimore in 1832, and nominated Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee for President and Martin Van Buren of New York for Vice President. Gov. Lucas' name also headed the first Jackson electorial ticket ever run in Ohio. He was Governor of Ohio, at the time a war was threatened between the State of Michigan and Ohio, about the State line.

The ex-Emperor of the French seems to endure his fall and exile with fortitude, if not with complacency. The English papers chronicle his movements with almost as much particularity as they do their Queen's. Their accounts shows that he spends his time in driving and walking about, seeing sights, and making and receiving calls. On the 4th of July he visited, in company with the Prince Imperial, the royal arsenal at Woolwich, where all the latest improvements in ordnance were exhibited to him, together with the process of manufacturing the new thirty five ton guns. It is said his health is better than when he was Emperor, and that he is gaining flesh.

California wonders.

There seems to be no end of wonders in California. The latest is a remarkable cave near Calaveras, wherein columns and pilasters, ornamented at their capital with volutes and modillions, at irregular intervals, enlist the visitor's attention; while representations of tapestry, cornice, and fresco work are engraven and plainly visible on its wall. Every form imaginable droopingly hang suspended, presenting all the variegated colors of the rainbow and brilliantly sparkle from the pale light of a candle like a thousand diamonds, while a like proportion of stalagmites underneath, with their sugar-coated surfaces, are constantly presented to view. Here and there, it is added, are carelessly piled bruised and broken fragments of those appropriate emblems of Infinite Wisdom that have succumbed to the normal destructive qualities of man.

How the Arab ladies perfume themselves is thus described by Sir Samuel Baker in his work on the Nile: In the floor of the hut or tent, as it may chance to be, a small hole is excavated sufficiently large to contain a champagne bottle. A fire of charcoal or simply glowing embers is made within the hole, which the woman about to be scented throws a handful of drugs. She then takes off the clothes or robe which forms her dress and crouches naked over the fumes, while she arranges her robe to fall as a mantle from her neck to the ground like a tent. She now begins to perspire freely in the hot-air bath, and the pores of the skin being open and moist, the volatile oil from the smoke of the burning perfume is immediately absorbed. By the time the fire has expired the scenting process is completed, and both her person and her robe are redolent of incense, with which they are so thoroughly impregnated that I have frequently smelt a party of women strongly at full a hundred yards distance, when the wind has been blowing from their direction.

How Long to Starve.

A man will die for want of air in five minutes, for want of sleep in ten days, for want of water in a week, for want of food at varying intervals, dependent on constitution, habits of life and the circumstances of the occasion. Instances have been given where persons have been said to live many weeks with out eating a particle of food; but when opportunities have been offered for a fair investigation of the case it has been invariably found that a weak and wicked fraud has been at the bottom of it.

On the 28th of August the captain of a Boston whaler was wrecked. For eight days he could not get a drop of water or a particle of food. On the day of the wreck he weighed one hundred and ninety pounds, and when rescued, he weighed one hundred pounns. A teaspoonful of brandy was given to each sailor but before they could be taken on board the vessel which saved them, they became unconscious, and remained so for two days, but alleventually recovered. Many persons have been killed eating too much after having fasted for a long time. The safe plan of procedure, and that which every reader should bear in mind, is to feel the way along, as persons who are traveling in the dark and fear a precipice ahead. There can be no rule given, because there so are many modifying circumstances. Give a teaspoonful of hot drink at a time and, if there are no ill effects, repeat in five minutes, and the same amount of soft food, boiled rice, softened bread or gruel, for the stomach is itself as weak as the sufferer in proportion, and can only manage a very small amount of food.

Wading in the water, or keeping the clothing saturated with water, even if it is sea-water, sensibly abates the horrors of thirst.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Horses in Summer.

Farm work, during the hot summer months, requires only the lightest harness. Wooden collars are now used with great comfort to the horse. In the city of New York the harness worn by the street railroad horses is scant as is consistent with the work they have to perform. No breeching is used, and hip-straps are dispensed with. Teams may often be seen plowing in the hot days of July and August in the same harness they wore during the winter. This is unnecessary, nay sometimes it amounts to positive cruelty. Remove every superfluous strap, take away the back-strap and crupper-band and let the air circulate freely around the body. At night when work is over, wash the sweat and dust from the legs and thighs of the horse; a dash of water on his flanks would be grateful to him. Let his stable be airy and clean, with a bed of clean straw. Kindness to these serviceable animals is the truest economy. Besides, we feel better when our horses are made comfortable; the sensation is akin to that derived from the doing of a benevolent action. A sensitive man cannot see a horse sweating under and galled by a heavy harness during the intense heat of a summer's day, without sympathy and pity, nor can he retire to rest with an easy conscience knowing that his faithful servants in the stable are improperly cared for and suffering. "The righteous man regardeth the life of his beast.',—American Agriculturist.

Poor Weak Woman.—Miss Susan Nipper who lives in a small tenement, a lone women. was quite "flustrated the other morning by an early call from a bachelor neighbor.

"What do you come here after?" said Miss Nipper.

"I came to borrow matches," he meekly replied.

"Matches that's a likely story. Why don't you make a match? I know whas you come for." cried the exasperated old virgin as she backed the old bachelor into a corner. "You come here to hug and kiss me almost to death! But you shan't, without you're the strongest, and the Lord knows you are!"

George Whitfield was one preaching to a seafaring audience in New York, when, suddenly assuming a nautical air and manner that were irresistible, he broke in with, "Well, my boys, we have a clear sky, and are making some headway over a smooth sea before a light breeze, and we shall soon lose sight of land. But what means this sudden lowering of the heavens, and that dark cloud arising from beneath the western horizon? Hark! Don't you hear distant thunder? Don't you see those flashes of lightning? There is a storm gathering! Every man to his duty! How the waves rise and dash against the ship! The air is dark!—the tempest rages! our masts are gone!—the ship is on her beams ends! What next?" This appeal instantly brought the sailors to their feet with a shout, "The longboat!—take to the longboat.

Dr. Hall, in his Journal of Health, says the best medicine in the world, more efficient in the cure of disease than all the potencies of the mtaeria medica, are warmth, rest, cleanliness, and pure air. Some persons make it a virtue to brave disease, "to keep it up" as long as they can move a foot or crook a finger, and it sometimes succeeds; but oftener the powers of life are thereby so completely exhausted that the system has lost all ability to recuperate, and slow typhoid fevers set in, and carry the patient to a premature grave. Whenever walking or work is an effort, a warm bed and cool room are the very first indispensable steps to sure and speedy recovery. Instinct leads all beasts and birds to quietude and rest the very moment disease or wounds assail the system.

The grasshoppers complain bitterly because in Vermont the grass crop is so short this season that they are getting round-shouldered and contracting pulmonary diseases by being obliged to stoop down to eat it.

New Yorkers are trying on the fashion of naming places on the European plan—as Backen-sack-on-the-Hudson, and sich; but it doesn't look well when they came to places like Harlem-on-the-Spuyten-Duyvil creek.

In a number of the Maine towns the drought and devastations of the grasshoppers have left the fields as bare as a ledge Farms which last year produced fifteen [illegible] season and the crops are utterly destroyed.

That was so bad a joke on the North Carolina Legislature. One of the members died, and it was resolved to convey the remains home at the expense of the State, but when they inquired into the matter it was found that he resided in Vermont.

Tennesseean who has been raising and preparing opium experimentally, is authority for the statement that the yield pe acre is from thirty to fifty pounds, which varies in price from $7,60 to $10 per pound. One hand can cultivate easily and well four acres, which, at a yield of thirty pounds, would be $1,200.

An Indiana man has effected a strategical combination against the potato bugs. He planted a grain of corn in each bill of potatoes. The corn came up before the potatoes, which, of course, cheated the little pests into the belief that it was a cornfield, and they never went near the potatoes until it was too late to do any damage.

The last rat story is from Chicago. In a house where the rats had been very troublesome traps had long been set, but to no purpose. Finally some of the family determined to watch the trap. It was cunningly set. Soon a young rat appeared and was about stepping on the fatal spring, when an old rat rushed to the rescue, seized the indiscreet juvenile by the tail and dragged him off to the hole.

The 'local' of the Chicago 'Republican' says: 'The newest method of making an honest living is to go round at night with an accomplice, and play tom cat under the windows of iracible bachelors. Then they throw boots and boot-jacks, and hair bruses, and crockery, and—and things at you, and you pick them up and sell them for old rags. We got part of a bed-room set worth $7,50 last night, and to-night we are going back to get the rest of the things.'

A Colorado saloon-keeper said of a rough crowd: 'I could'nt get their whisky strong enough for them, so after trying every way, I at last made a mixture of poison oak and butternut. It fetched 'em I called it the sheep herders' delight and it was a popular drink. The first Pike I tried it on yelled with delight; the next one took two drinks, and turned a double somerset in the road before the house. A peddler came along, and after he took several drinks of my sheeps herders' delight, he went off and stole his own pack, and hid it in the woods.'

A Northerner prospecting in Texas, was caught by one of the lively fevers of that region. In the crisis of the 'heated term, he had about given up hope, when he saw the doctor trying on his coat and hat, and the writer quietly slipping off with his boots. Indignation at this premature appropriation and the heartlessness of such a fashion of notifying a sick man of his coming fate got the better of the other fever in the traveler's blood. He sprang from bed, revolver in hand, and next morning the waiters of that hotel attended the funeral of one of their comrads, in a body. The doctor has had two or three professional brethern exploring among his digestive organs ever since, without finding a couple of ounces of lead that lie heavily on his stomach; and the sick man is on his way northward, rejoicing in his remarkable recovery.

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk. Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

LOST AND FOUND.

BY MARY E. WRIGHT.

[illegible]

All day long his sweet voice clammored
Round our cottage in the vale,
Waking up the hillside echoes,
[illegible]

[illegible]
Of my weary little one.

Now no more he comes to ask me,
When the stars the blue skies gem,
[illegible]

Lost! another, sometimes bashful,
With a timid, shrinking way,
Sometimes bold, unthoughtful, careless,
But a treasure every day.

Blushing, when sometimes we asked him
[illegible]
With [illegible] echoes,
And a shower of sunny curls.

Thinking of her, I remember
That he brought a painted boat
To the creek, one day in autumn,
Just to see the bright thing float.

And his eyes grew bright with gladness,
When beneath the snow-white sail,
Through the swiftly gliding [illegible]
Flashed the name of [illegible]

Found! a soldier in life's battle,
Strong in all his manhood's power,
Sternly looking to the future,
With its coming hopes and fears.

And beside him, looking [illegible]
With her eyes of summer blue;
With her soft hand fondly folded
In the one she loves so true,—

An Experience at Niagara Falls.

A correspondent writes:

When I first got to Niagara the hack drivers took a fancy to me. They chased me up so that at one time there were at least twenty of them in a line, all anxious to do me a favor. It was a queer looking sight. If I had'nt known I was alive, I would have thought I was a corpse at the head of a funeral procession.

Niagara is a nice place to get rid of money. It is full of feather fans with stuffed birds in the middle of them, alabaster whistles, squaws, bead moccasins, names cut out of the falls, eaglets stuffed with straw, owls chock full of hay, little birds that wish they were alive, two cents' worth of ice cream for a quarter of a dollar, and such like. You can buy ten cents worth of anything at Niagara by just payin one dollar for it.

This is the greatest place in the world for bridal couples; they are always here, with orange blossoms growing around the women's heads, and the men done up in black broadcloth, all very susceptible, and all green—very, very green. I'll tell you something about a bridle couple, not a bridal couple. A pair of hack horses are a bridle couple, and it's about a pair of hack horses I have to write.

A fellow who had one of these teams started a conversation with me, and we conversed together thusly:

"Take a ride?"

"No."

"To Goat Island?"

"No."

"Luner Island?"

"No."

"Suspension Bridge?

"No."

"Rapids?"

"No."

"Whirlpool?"

"No."

"Devil's Hole?"

"No."

"Horse Shoe Fall?"

"No."

"Clifton House?"

"No."

You see I'd been to all of those places, and I didn't sour much to go to them some more. I hadn't been to Lundy's Lane, and when he said "Lundy's Lane," says I, "who is Lundy?"

"Why," said he, "there is [illegible] American Eagle soared aloft, and with one [illegible] of the British [illegible]"

"No," said I.

"Yes," said he.

"Have they preserved the tuft?" I asked. He said they had.

"What became of old Lundy? said I

"Alas!" he replied, "he sleeps beneath the sod."

Then we wept—the hack driver and me. He wept for old Lundy, and I wept for the sod. It was a picture, it was. It ought to be did up in wax.

Says I, "how much to do Lundy?"

"Well" says he, "seeing it's you, I'll take you there for a dollar, and you could not go for less than that in a wheel-barrow."

I got into his vehicle, and going out everything [illegible] three patches of grass with rail fences around them, one old [illegible] with a fence around her, and a country road. The driver [illegible] So I gave him a dollar bill painted green on the back.

[illegible] want gold."

Says I, "I haven't got no gold."

He said I was a [illegible] looking cuss that had come to the Falls for my health. So [illegible] said.

"You little withered cuss, you if you do not [illegible] your snoot."

My snoot feels better when it ain't punched, so I [illegible]. Then I said, "I guess I've got enough of Lundy," and I went to get into the wagon, when he yelled out:

"What in thunder are you doing?"

I said, "Getting in."

"Well" said he, "that is cool! You had better get out again darn quick."

Then he broke [illegible] to me very gently that he had agreed to bring me out for a dollar, and the price for going back would be five dollars.

"No," said I.

"Yes," said he.

"Then I'll walk," said I.

"Walk and be darned! said he.

He got up on his old rattle-box and commenced to [illegible] move. I looked like the fourth dozen mourners at a back funeral. He talked to me thusly:

"[illegible] fore? Going [illegible] shower [illegible]"

[illegible] "I'll get in." I gave him the dollar.

Said he, "Give me another dollar."

I told him he agreed to take me for five dollars.

"[illegible]," said he, "[illegible] you see it is raining now."

I gave him the money, and finally reached the hotel, and I didn't take no hacks [illegible]

Curiosities of Life.

[illegible] pulse, and know that at every stroke some immortal passes to his Maker; some fellow being crosses the river of death and if we think it [illegible] that it should be so long before our turn comes.

Half of all who live, die before seventeen.

[illegible]

If you take a thousand persons who have reached seventy years there are of clergymen orators and public speakers 43; farmers 40; workmen 33; soldiers 32; lawyers, 29; professors, 57; doctors 24.

These statements are very instructive. Farmers and workmen do not arrive at good old age as often as the clergyman and others who perform no manuel labor but this is owing to neglect of the laws of inattention to the proper habits of living, eating drinking sleeping, dress, and proper care of themselves after the work of the day is done. These farmers eat a heavy supper of a summer day and sit around the doors in their shirt sleeves and in their tired condition and weakened circulation are easily chilled laying the foundation for diarrahoa, bilious colic, lung fever or consumption.—Hall's Journal of Health.

How a Mother Taught Reading.

I have heard of a lady who, thirty years of age taught her children to read from toy-books and newspapers until they could read distinctly and by comprehension any short article written in simple language. Her method was to show the child a picture, as of an ox; then finding the word 'ox,' also—one being the picture of its name. She thus taught the child to associate the two as one idea, and he was then directed to find the word in some other book or paper, and thus the word ox, wherever found and in whatever company, represented to him a definite idea, an animal with which he was familiar. She would then take a word describing the ox in a respect to color, size, or form and proceed in the same way until it was made familiar. After several words were thus made familiar, she showed that these words were composed of letters in different ways the names of other familiar objects could be formed. In a little time the children formed a pleasant pastime in trying to form words for themselves, and in fitting them to familiar objects.—National Teacher.

Fattening for the Harem.

The London Court Journal tells about the very curious mode of fattening for the imperial harem practiced in Morocco. You take a plump young damsel of about fourteen, with a tendency to obesity—few Moresque girls are destitute of such tendency—you shut her up in a room of which the windows are carefully defended by heavy curtains of green silk. You cause your plump young damsel to sit cross-legged on a divan, and then, having [illegible] full of couscousou, or moistened meal rolled into balls, you cram her during a certain number of hours everday with as many of these balls as she can conveniently swallow. Well crammed, the Emperor of Morocco will pay an exceedingly handsome price for her her. That nothing may interfere with the due conduct of the fattening process, a black nurse stands behind the incipient favorite with a mantrap or big stick, much used in Moorish domestic economy, and if the patient manifests any reluctance to swallow the balls of cuscousou she is immediately and unmercifully thrashed.

A club is being formed among the ladies, for the purpose of [illegible] some honorable employment for the miserable, unhappy loafers who hang around our street corners, and for the want of something else to do waste their valuable (?) time in commenting on the private character and personal [illegible] of every lady who passes. [illegible] a good job of wood sawing or a day or two's work on the road might help their digestion to such a degree that they would [illegible] the [illegible] so fortunate as to get their noses beyond the domain of the kitchen, and really find time to run down town to do a little shopping.—South Bend Union.

THE [illegible]

[illegible] that cannot be compromised.

"Where's that you say Frederick? [illegible] Bolton Bank broke? [illegible]"

And Frederick Wells, who had been reclining in one chair with his feet resting on the back of another, the very picture of enjoyment, sprang to his feet, tipping over his chair, and sending the cigar he was smoking to the farther end of the room.

"Yes it is; it is here, in the paper as you can see for yourself. But what is it to you? Did you have anything invested there?"

"No, but Miss Neal had—which amounts to, about the same thing."

An air of intense chagrin overspread his handsome, through rather effeminate features, as he read the paragraph which his companion pointed.

"Confound it," he muttered, "its always my luck to have my dish tipped over just when it's full. Though I must say, if it's got to come that I'm glad it happened the month before, rather than the month after our marriage."

Charles Hayden, a young man whose features, though less regularly formed, were expressive of far more manliness and goodness of heart, gazed at the speaker with an air of undisguised astonishment.

"Why so, Wells? you surely did not seek the hand of Miss Neal simply for her money?"

"Well no, I can't say that. She is a most lovely and charming woman; really, it cuts me to the heart to give her up. But then, Ellen, I'm too poor to afford such luxury. And Miss Neal can no more afford to marry a poor man than I can, [illegible] So we're about even."

"And have you no thought for the pain that your desertion will inflict upon the heart you have won," said Hayden, in a tone of suppressed indignation.

"Softly, my dear fellow," said Wells, who had resumed his comfortable position, and was solacing himself with a fresh cigar. "I hardly think that it will be any such desperate affliction to Miss Neal as you suppose. Indeed, I've thought several times of late, that had it not been for her foolishly high ideas of the binding nature of such a promise, she would have broken the engagement herself."

"And knowing this, you would have held her to its fulfillment,"

"Not being sufficiently disinterested to refuse the gift of fifty thousand dollars, I rather think I should."

"You are not worthy of a true hearted woman, like Ellen Neal!" was the indigant response.

"Then so much the better for her, that I should leave her to be appropriated by some one that is—you, for instance. It strikes me that you used to be some what interested in that quarter, now is the time, old fellow, for you to go in and win."

Charles Hayden scarcely felt or heard the covert sneer in these words, so much was he engrossed by the new-born hope that had sprung up in his heart, and which made its pulses beat so quickly and strongly.

"S[illegible] you [illegible] mount [illegible] to his ward [illegible]"

"[illegible] believe [illegible] indi[illegible] Mr [illegible] for a [illegible] with [illegible] ever [illegible]"

"I don[illegible] for Fred[illegible]"

"Oh, [illegible]" said E[illegible] smile [illegible] I ha[illegible] give h[illegible] He se[illegible] to me."

"H[illegible] Wells [illegible] with his own handsome face [illegible] much attached [illegible] words."

"You are too severe. Any way, I have promised, and cannot break my word."

"Oh, no, certainly not; far better break your heart."

"I don't believe I've got any," was the laughing response. "If I have, I've never been able to discover it. Never fear for me, auntie. I dare say I shall be as happy with Frederick as with any one."

Yet in spite of these lightly spoken words, there rose up before her mental vision one with whom she knew she could be far happier. But, even if she had been free to choose, how did she know that he would choose her—but what right had she to indulge in such fancies?

When Mr. Thornly reached his office he found Frederick Wells waiting to see him, who accosted him with an air of constraint, not to say embarrassment, not at all remarkable, when we consider the awkward errand on which he had come.

"I heard of Miss Neal's misfortune last evening, sir, and I assure you with deep regret."

"Miss Neal's misfortune, what the deuce d'ye mean?" said the old gentleman gruffly, with whom the young man was by no means, a favorite.

"Why the failure of Bolton Bank to be sure," Mr. Wells responded quickly, the suspicion entering his mind that the shrewd old lawyer was trying to dodge the question.

"Oh, ah, yes, I think I understand you. Well, what of it?"

"Only this, sir, that deeply as I regret the necessity, the high regard I cherish for your ward, and the knowledge that I shall be unable, at least for some years, to offer her such a home as she is accustomed to, and merits, demand the sundering of our engagement."

"That is to say, in plain English my ward having lost her fortune, Mr. Wells no longer desires to marry [illegible]"

In spite of all his efforts, Mr. Wells felt his cheeks tingle beneath the quiet scorn in the eyes that rested upon his countenance.

"You put it rather harshly," he said, forcing a smile, "but we won't quarrel about terms."

"Very good. All I have to say is, that what you are pleased to term Miss Neal's misfortune, promises to be the best thing that could happen to her. Good morning."

When Mr. Thornly saw his ward again, [illegible] his countenance was full of [illegible]

"I have important news for you, Ellen, one portion of it rather bad, but the other so good as to more than to make up for it. Indeed, as I told a certain young man this morning, I consider it the best thing that could possibly happen to you. First, for the bad. The bank in which your money was invested has gone up, and won't probably pay two cents on the dollar. Now for the good: in consequence of this Mr. Frederick Wells called to express his regrets that he must relinquish the honor and happiness of making you his wife."

"Is it possible," exclaimed Ellen. How I have been deceived in him. I thought he loved me for myself alone. Oh, Mr. Thornly, how thankful I ought to be that I have discovered how false his heart is, before it was too late."

"Mr. Hayden is in the parlor, and wants to see Miss Ellen," said a servant opening the door.

Ellen entered the parlor in a rather perturbed state of mind; much as she rejoiced at her escape, she could not but feel deeply grieved at this discovery of the unworthiness of him, whom she had hitherto esteemed so highly as to often reproach herself that she could not love him as he deserved.

Mr. Hayden's mind was also, much disturbed, though from a very different cause.

It was in vain that that young gentleman tried to recall the neat little speech, that he had conned over on his way to the house, as is usual in such cases, it completely vanished from his mind as soon as he found himself in the presence of the lady, for whose benefit it was intended.

At last, making a desperate effort, he broke the rather embarrassing silence by saying:

"My dear Miss Neal, I have heard of your loss of fortune, and cannot express what a great burthen it lifted from my heart. I was so truly rejoiced, as to quite forget myself—"

Here, startled by the indignant astonishment depicted upon Ellen's countenance, the poor fellow stammered, and then stopped.

"Sir—Mr. Hayden," faltered Ellen deeply wounded at language so different from what she had anticipated. "I am at loss to understand why you should rejoice over my misfortune."

"Dear one, I know it is very selfish in me, and yet I was never half so happy in my life as when I learned that I might, without being accused of unworthy motives, tell you what a privilege I should deem it to cherish and care for you, as man cherishes and cares for the dearest object of his love."

The sudden revolution of feeling caused by these words, sent warm, happy tears to Ellen's eyes.

"I thank heaven for the reverse of fortune that has given me the rich treasure of your love," she murmured, as she laid her hand softly in his.

Half an hour later, the lovers were receiving the congratulations, warm approval of Ellen's guardian.

The old gentleman listened silently, and with evident enjoyment to the plans they laid for the future.

"I am sorry to spoil your pretty romance of 'love in a cottage,' and all that sort of a thing," he said at last, "but the fact is, Ellen—though, as I told you, your fortune was invested in the Bolton Bank—I happened to withdraw the money the week before it failed. But, don't be downhearted about it, my young friends; you'll find plenty of people who will gladly relieve you of its burthen. If you can't dispose of it any other way, you might donate it to found a mission school for the Feegee Mermaids, or some other equally as practicable missionary enterprise."

We can't say as to whether our young people followed this suggestion, but this we know, that throughout her long and happy married life, Ellen often had occasion to bless the fortunate blunder that enabled her to discern between "THE TRUE HEART, AND THE FALSE."

A DOWN-EASTER lately came to New York, and took lodgings at one of the high houses. Telling the waiter he wished to be called in the morning for the boat, both of them started on their winding way upward, till, having arrived at the eight flight of stairs, Jonathan caught the arm of his guide, and accosted him thus, "Look here stranger if you intend to call me at six o'clock in the morning, you might as well do it now, as 'twill be that time afore I can get down again."

A Frenchman stopping at a tavern asked for Jacob. "There is no such person here," said the landlord. "Tis not a person I want, sure, but the beer warmed with a poker." "Well," answered mine host, "that is flip." "Ah yess, sure, you are in the de right. I mean Phillip."

SUMMER FASHIONS.—Large checks are in demand for summer toilets. A check for $5,000, presented to Miss Moneybags by her father has been greatly admired.

The King of the Turf.

Dexter cost Mr. Bonner $33,000. He was foaled in 1858, got by Rysdyk's Hambletonian out of a mare by a American Star, grandam the dam of Shark, raised by Jonathan Hawkins of Orange county, New York. Dexter is a brown horse, with four white legs and blaze face, [illegible] hands in height. He trotted at Buffalo the fastest time on record, [illegible] mile in 2 minutes 17¼ seconds, [illegible] public race; he went against time [illegible] The course was over a mile [illegible]

In the race between Dexter and Ethan Allen with running mate, on Fashion Course, in June 1867, Dexter's time was taken separately by the judges. It was 2 min 16 sec. in the first heats. Dexter also trotted a mile under a saddle in two min. 18 sec. which is the fastest time on record to saddle. Fastest wagon time, one mile, 2.24, by Dexter; fastest two-mile wagon time, 4 min. 56½ sec. Mr. Bonner drove Dexter over Prospect Park Course in his road wagon a mile in the unprecedented time of 2 min. 21¼ sec.

After this remarkable feat Mr Bonner in his usual liberal style offered the sum of one hundred thousand dollars for any horse that could equal Dexter's time to a road wagon under the same circumstances. When the time of the heat was announced from the Judges' stand Mr. Bonner was congratulated on all sides, and he was overflowing with joy.

Senator Grant, the Napoleon of the turf, offered $75,000 for Dexter a year ago. Mr. Grant always said that Dexter combines in an extraordinary degree greater speed and endurance than any other trotting horse that has ever appeared on the turf, as Dexter is the best and truest horse he has ever seen. He can trot in any shape, to saddle, harness, or wagon, one mile, two mile, or three mile heats.

Mr. Bonner may well be proud of Dexter's achievements.

A Vermont Man's Wonderful Clock.

Mr. K. D. Munson, an old resident of Williston, Vermont, has just completed a wonderful calendar clock, which has attracted visitors from far and near. It is in every detail his handiwork, the old farmer having spent his spare hours in working upon it the last eight years. He has produced an eight-day clock, whose dial marks the second, minute, hour, day of the week, day of the month, month of the year; a thermometer rests against its pendulum, giving the state of temperature; the ball of the pendulum, contains a miniature time-piece, which derives its motive power solely from its vibrations, and keeps accurate time. There is also a cylinder musical attachment, which may set to play any one of seven tunes at the end of each hour. In this last feature it can be so adjusted and such was the intention of the maker, as to play "old hundred" at the end of each hour on Sunday, and "Old Folks at Home," "Swiss Waltz," "Star Spangled Banner," "Hail Columbia," "Yankee Doodle," and "Sweet Home," respectively, on each succeeding day in the week. The entire mechanism is placed in a black walnut case, which measures ten feet high, twenty inches wide and ten inches deep. The case is highly polished, and its front bears the inscription in raised letters, "Our Union forever." "U. S." Mr. Munson, who is 62 years old and quite feeble, proud of what he has accomplished.

A Boy's Purpose.

When Warren Hastings was a lad only seven years old, he lay one day beside a little rivulet that flowed on towards the river Iris, and there he formed the purpose which was his guiding star through life. His parents were in reduced circumstances, but descended from a noble family. The boy's ambition was to win back the lost estates of his ancestors—to make Daylesford his own. To this purpose he steadily adhered. Every aim and effort of his boyhood was associated with this purpose. It seemed like the romantic day-dreams of a boy, very little likely ever to be realized. The young Hastings sat on the same bench in the village school with the peasant children with whom he played, and to an outward observer there was little to distinguish him from the rest. But the world in the boy's heart was as different from their hopes and aspirings as if he belonged to another planet. He held on to his great life purpose of winning back his family lands all through his checkered life-history this was like a star, ever leading him on. And success at last crowned his efforts. He was able to buy back the beautiful fields and parks of his ancestors and rebuilt the family mansion; and here the last days of his toilsome life was spent.

An Atlanta, Ga., boy ate thirteen apple-dumplings for dessert one day last week. The boy and the dumplings were buried in one grave.

Give Us Back Our Tails.

If we, as Mr. Darwin say,
From monkeys are descended,
Old Time, in changing things, hath not
As yet the matter mended.

Descendents of our ancestors
[illegible]
Who had no cake of bounty [illegible]
No [illegible] to pay.
No tailor bills came in [illegible]
Clothing gave—
And freaks of fashion did not make
Of monkey-girl a slave.

So the olden way's the happiest way;
The new condition fails;
And, Darwin, if you can, my boy,
Just give us back the tails.

[illegible]

The [illegible]

In waiting for the ledger to close,
And the [illegible] out.

They have no votes, 'tis true, but they'd
No [illegible]
And o'er [illegible]
They never had to weep.

So the olden way's the happiest way;
The new condition fails;
And, Darwin, if you can, my boy,
Just give us back the tails.

They had no fashion's promenade,
[illegible]
But then the old bare monkey had
No milliner to pay.

They had no wine, the monkeys young,
Through night to keep a-morning;
They saved thereby [illegible]
A headache in the morning.

A peaceful race were they who, when
To war's appeal did fly;
They saved thereby occasion for A Joint Commission High.

A smarter race were they than that
Which from them hath descended,
And Time, by changing this hath not
As yet the matter mended.

For the olden way's the happiest way;
The new condition fails;
So, Darwin, if you can, my boy,
Please give us back the tails.

BREAKING HORSES.—There is nothing more unreasonable or unwise—we are almost tempted to say inhuman—than the old method of treating horses—namely, allowing them to run wild until a certain age, and then having a violent conflict with them for the mastery. On this subject a well known horseman offers the following sensible remarks:

"I am glad to see that the practice of breaking horses is growing into disuse. Gentle your horses, and acquaint them with the duties which they shall have to perform, but never whip them. Accustom them from their earliest colt-hood, to be handled; pet them, in fact, win their love by kindness. Let them learn what a halter is [illegible] will not shock or frighten them. Teach them to put up straps and buckles, and when old enough, have them daily bear or drag some light load; but do it all kindly, and gradually lead them on in their education, so that when the proper time comes, they can be saddled or harnessed with neither risk nor trouble. But to throw the whole burden of a three years' education upon them in about the same number of days, and to conquer the poor trembling, frightened animals by brute force, is inhuman and unreasonable. Let us learn and teach our children to treat the animals given us for our service by our Master, in a manner worthy of human beings."

Elephantine.

A cargo of elephants sounds like a fancy of Dean Swift or DeFoe, but this was what actually arrived at New York, a day or two ago, direct from Ceylon. There were eleven of the intelligent animals, and owing to the precautions taken for their proper feeding and stabling, only one died on the passage, and the remaining ten were hoisted upon the New York dock in the best of health and spirits, and to the great delight of a large and enthusiastic but respectful audience. Ceylon was left on the 20th of March, and the weather remained favorable until passing the Cape of Good Hope. Most of the elephants, however, became seasick, and went through the agony in the most orthodox fashion, recovering at last like members of the human family. After passing the Cape a series of terrific gales was encountered, and the situation of the animals was rendered more uncomfortable; but beyond giving vent to a fearful roaring, they passed the ordeal with fortitude. They used 25,000 gallons of water on the passage, and 125 bales of hay, averaging 275 pounds per day, which food was in addition to two bushels of grain and "paddy," the last rolled up in a form of little balls or cakes and fed to them from the hands of their Singhalese keepers. Those on board would occasionally give them a sea-biscuit, which was esteemed by the elephants a great luxury. They seemed to comprehend and mourn over the decease of their companion, and in various ways gave token of that wonderful intelligence so long noticed as being possessed by this noble animal.

Some one told him that three kegs of brandy were being destroyed.

Damon and Pythias.

BY THE "FAT CONTRIBUTOR."

The Knights of Pythias, says the Omaha correspondent of the Cincinnati Times, are making quite a stir in Omaha at present. I confess I know very little about that mysterious order. The title of the order was doubtless bestowed by the history of the two ancient Greek buffers who carried on a general friendship business under firm name of "Damon & Pythias." These parties lived in Syracuse (N. Y.) and consequently known as "Salt Pointers." Their back doors fronted each other, and they were the most intimate friends, even in mid-winter. Their friendship dated back to the days of sunny childhood. If one of them had anything he always wanted the other to have some of it. If for instance, Damon got a licking from the preceptor, he wasn't satisfied until Pythias got one too. Pythias got the measles once and he went right off and give them to Damon. They shared everything together. Damon found his father's whisky bottle but he didn't keep it to himself. Not he. He went and got Pythias drunk. If Pythias ran all night, Damon kept it up all the next day, so that the days of Damon were equal to the Knights of Pythias.

Damon was a member of the City Council of Syracuse, while Pythias belonged to the National Guard. It appears that one Dionysius had been scheming to have the Council declare him Mayor of Syracuse without a vote of the people, and succeeded one morning when Damon was absent. Ascertaining what had been done, Damon hastened to the Council chamber, denouncing Dionysius and his fellow councilmen who sustained the fraud. Meeting Dionysius, he attempted to stab him with an ivory paper-cutter, remarking as he did so—

"—By all the Gods! One blow
And Syracuse is free!"

(There had been a heavy duty on Syracuse up to that time, owing to the salt monopoly, and Damon was a free trader.) He might have freed his beloved city from the tyrant had he not stopped to "buy all the Gods," and blow about it. He was secured by the Mayor's new police and condemned to death.

Pythias had a sweetheart named Calanthe, whom he loved next to Damon. Their wedding day was appointed, and just as the marriage ceremony was being performed, news was brought to Pythias of what had occurred, and leaving Calanthe only about half married, he hastened to the station-house where Damon was confined, arriving just as he was being led forth to execution. Damon was petitioning Dionysius for a few hours' respite, in order that he might see his family, but the tyrant wouldn't listen to it.

Pythias then offered to take Damon's place for the space of six hours, and if at the expiration of that time, his friend returned not, he would perish in his stead—hoped to die if he wouldn't. The proposition was accepted, and Damon hurried away to his family, who lived away out in the vicinity of the salt works.

Sad indeed was the parting of Mr. and Mrs. Damon. The interview was necessarily brief. He had to hurry back, or he wouldn't be in season to see himself die. Damon was much affected, and when he tore himself away there was a dame on the floor in a swoon.

"Fetch up the old mare!" yelled Damon to his hired man Lucullus. He was excited, because, you see, it was getting late and he didn't want to keep the executioners waiting on his account. Then it was Lucullus' acknowledge that, in order to save his master he had given the old mare a dog-button, and the [illegible] sitting on the body. Furious at the thought of not reaching Syracuse within the allotted time, and knowing how mortified Pythias would be if compelled to die in consequence, he seized Lucullus to rend him to peices. It would have been good-bye Lucullus had not a horseman appeared at that moment, whom Damon persuaded to dismount, taking him gently by the throat. Then mounting in his stead, he dashed away towards the city.

In the meantime, every preparation had been made for the execution of Pythias.

Time was up and no word of Damon. The people sneered, and asked if anybody supposed Damon was such a fool as to come back again, and even Pythias began to fear his old pard had gone back on him.

Suddenly a great shout was heard. A cloud of dust was seen to rise up in the direction of the salt-works. It approached rapidly, and in a short time Damon came tearing in on horseback at a pace that would have made Phil Sheridan so ashamed of himself that he would have ridden "twenty miles away" and hid.

There was just a shade of disappointment on Damon's face when he saw that Pythias still lived; but he jumped off his horse, threw a hand-spring on the scaffold, and shouted: "Bring on your cleaver! Damon is on deck."

Dionysius was so struck with this exhibition of friendship that he pardoned them both at once. They then fell into each other's arms, exclaiming:

"Pythy!"

"Damy!"

A colored orator at Lancaster, Ohio, the other day, demonstrated the liberality of his views by exclaiming: "I pray the Lord I may live to see the day when the colored man may forget his prejudices so far as to be willing to receive all other races as equals."

KENTUCKY ELECTION.—The Democrat ticket has been elected by about 30,000 majority. This according to the vote polled, is a slight increase on our usual majority, and we may depend on old "Kentuck" for a good sound majority in '72.

A RADICAL paper wants to know, "what is Grant doing?" An exchange adds: "It is easily answered. Lounging around Long Branch, smoking cigars, drinking whisky, driving fast horses, receiving presents, appointing his relations to office, laying the ropes for a renomination, paying no attention to the interests of the people, and amusing himself generally."

Governor's Rent Steal.

The Indianapols Sentinel says, there can be no more bare faced fraud than Governor's Baker and Morton taking out of the Treasury five thousand dollars a year for house rent, when they have not paid more than one-forth of that sum for a "suitable residence." But Morton is a little worse than Baker, for he drew at the rate of five thousand dollars a year for a period previous to the passage of the act. That is robbing the Treasury with the audacity of a highwayman. If he had the right to draw money for rent an act that a Radical paper says was passed to indirectly increase the salary of the Governor, for a month or two before the passage of the law, he was inaugurated Governor.

SENATOR TIPTON, of Newbrask—a Methodist preacher, by the way—who has never been accused of being anything but a straight open Republican, said, in a speech at Omaha, the other day:

"I am unalterably opposed to the ruinous and corrupting course of the present administration, and I here pledge my self to make that opposition both open and uncompromising."

It is true. There is hardly a necessity of calling for further proof, It is true, that the Republican party is falling to pieces rapidly. Daily, through our exchanges, do we find testimony that convinces us that in the next campaign we are to be successful, and it should be thus. Too much plunder of the people's treasury has taken place, and to many aristocrats are floating through the eastern cities. The time has come, and a change we must have.

IT would be a source of gratification to the American people if the present Chief Executive of the United States could say with the Father of the country, when writing to an American Minister abroad in 1796; "I have rendered to my country every service to which my abilities were competent—not from pecuniary or ambitious motives, nor for a desire to provide for any one farther than their intrinsic merit entitled them to; and surely not with a view to bring any of my own relations into office." On the other hand, Ulysses First Heaven grant that he may be last, has appointed thirty-four members of his family to lucrative position. What a contrast!

Holden, the deposed Governor of North Carolina, is about to vindicate his title to be considered a public nuisance, by adding another to the list of worthless newspapers printed in Washington.

Thus he assures his readers, he will be prepared to do at the next session of the Legislature.

PRESIDENTIAL CHANCES.

How Parties Stand at Present.

[From the New York Herald.]

There are 317 electoral voters. A candidate must get 159 to be elected. If we take the States that are generally acknowledged to be Democratic, and those which were carried by the Demoqrats at the last election, as an indication of what the vote of the Electoral College may be, the result would be about as follows:

DEMOCRATIC.

Alabama	8	Nevada	3
Arkansas	5	New York	33
California	5	New Hampshire	5
Delaware	3	Maryland	7
Florida	3	North Carolina	9
Georgia	9	Oregon	3
Indiana	13	Tennessee	10

Missouri	11	Virginia	10

Kansas	3	Mississippi	7
Louisiana	7	South Carolina	6
Maine	7	Vermont	5
Massachusetts	12	Wisconsin	8
Michigan	8

Thirteen States......95

DOUBTFUL.

Connecticut	6	Pennsylvania	26
New Jersey	7	Texas	6
Ohio	21	Nebraska	3

Six States......35

Supposing the two parties to hold their ground in the States put down as Democratic and Republican, the Democrats would have to draw six votes from the States set down as doubtful to elect a President. To carry Connecticut would accomplish that. New Jersey, which has generally been Democrats will secure again, would give one more vote than wanted. Texas would secure the election to that party under the circumstances we have assumed. Then there are the two great States of Pennsylvania and Ohio, which, to all appearances, will be debatable ground. Of course, either of these, even without Connecticut, New Jersey, and Texas, would give more votes than neccessary to elect a Democrat. In fact, with either Ohio or Pennsylvania the Democrats could afford to lose two or three of the smaller States set down in the Democratic column, as New Hampshire, Florida and Arkansas, and still have votes to spare. But, supposing New York, which is now Democratic throughout, should, through late events and mismanagement, be revolutionized and go for the Republican Presidential candidate, there would be still Pennsylvania, Ohio, Connecticut, New Jersey and Texas to fall back upon. Pennsylvania and New Jersey and Connecticut, even with the loss both of New York and Pennsylvania, would give the election to the Democrats if the other States should stand as placed above.

The Republicans will have to secure sixty-four votes in addition to those of the States set down as positively for the party to elect their candidate. They would have to carry all the doubtful States. If they should lose even one of the smaller States, that is, either Connecticut, New Jersey or Texas, and yet carry both Ohio and Pennsylvania, with New York for the Democrats, the Democratic candidate would be elected. If the Republicans should carry all three of the great States of New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio there would be little probability of failure. Leaving New York out of the Democratic column as we have given it, and turning over the doubtful States of Ohio and Pensylvania to the Republicans, the Democrats would lack thirty-nine votes. Admitting that they could carry the other doubtful States—namely, Connecticut, New Jersey, Texas, and Nebraska, in all twenty-two votes from the States ranged as Republican. Out of these the only three that seem barely possible for the Democrats to gain are Maine, Mississippi, and Louisiana, present appearances, then, the gain of either New York or Pennsylvania, with the other States classed as doubtful, would give the Republicans the election.

The Nebraska Constitutional Convention raises the Governor's salary from $1,000 to $4,000 a year.

GOOD MANNERS.—Of all the acts of man which go to give others an estimate of his character, his [illegible] meeting of the International Workingmen's Association, held in the city of New York on the 22d of July, for the purpose of discussing the riot of July 12th, a Frenchman named Millott delivered the following eloquent address:

My friend, Citizen Guillotel is no longer a native of France. [illegible] was born in Ireland, and in the land of his birth contained a hatred [illegible] class of Irishmen who do not profess the same faith and who belong to a different part of the country. Citizen G. hears of this country as a home for the oppressed. Thinking himself oppressed he comes here. (Laughter.) —The ancient legends of his land are forgotten, and he cannot sing the songs he used to. He speaks of Lexington, Bunker Hill, and George Washington, and hums the "Star Spangled Banner." (Laughter.) He votes, perhaps more than once (great laughter), and possesses great influence. He is religious, too, and marches five or six miles one day every year in honor of St. Patrick. But the other faction will not let him rest. They think they are oppressed too, and come here, and not caring much about St. Patrick, propose to march on their own day the 12th of July. But then the Citizen G. become another man. He is again an Irishman. He forgets Lexington, Bunker Hill, and George Washington, and sings "Sticks and Stones of my Country." (Laughter.) All knowledge of the Constitution and laws of the country which he has adopted fade from his mind, and he is only desirous of putting one of his ancient rivals out of the way with a brickbat or other desirable projectile. (Continued laughter.) I think I have stated the case of my friend of the opposition fairly. I say opposition, because he opposes the government. This is America; not Ireland, nor France, nor any other country. And while it stretches out its succoring hands in welcome and aid to the poor and downcast of all nations, and takes them to its bosom, it only asks, that which it must have, that its new-found children will leave their slavery, fanaticism, and feuds with the country they discard. (Applause.) Once here they are Americans they are free, all alike, and the laws of the country in which they live, and its beneficent provisions that all have equal liberty to do all that is legal must be upheld. (Applause.) The quarrel and religious differences, and the social distinction of the old land belong there, not here. They are as the small-pox disease infected clothes worn by the emigrant, and should be discarded forever before he plants his foot on the soil of this land.—What is it to America whether James or William conquered? They were at best the exponents of brutal warfare, the upholders of monarchy and despotism.—Let them and their battles rest in their European graves. What does America know about St. Patrick, or St. Kevin, or St. So-and-So—gentlemen no doubt very good in their way, but whose practical influence ceased at their death and the magnitude of the importance of their good work was never fully known, and never will be in the countries to which they belonged. Their fame has space enough and men enough in Ireland to be celebrated without coming here. Happy America, that though not possessing a saint like St. Patrick, has yet hundreds of of thousands of angelic saints, fair brave women who rear their children in honor and education, and the sound of whose sweet voices make the firesides of the land peaceable, happy, and good. This, gentlemen, exhausts nearly all I have to say. When the quarrel and immunities of the different classes of the people of other countries are brought into this and fought out here, then the flag of the United States should be taken down, and the pennant of the victorious party raised in its place. No; well thinking as my friend Citizen Guillotel generally is, I must differ from him on this occasion, and say in all sincerity, and with an earnest hope that the course I advocate be adopted, I must say that there should not be any parades or processions allowed in this country at all, save those that commemorate American national events—such as Washington's Birthday, the Fourth of July, &c. And when I as a French adopted citizen, say that this is my hope, I know, I feel that the ardent wish of the whole American born people is with me. (Long continued applause.)

Another Bee Story.

A story is going rounds of the newspapers to the effect that a swarm of bees lately lit upon a boy, in Missouri, and that the father of the boy got him off with but one sting, (given by a bee that the child bit to keep it out of his mouth(, by telling him to stand perfectly still, and then removing his hat, which was covered with bees, and placing it on a bush, to which the other bees immediately swarmed. This is pronounced "gammon" by some ignoramuses, but to every person who knows anything of bees it will be the most probable thing in the world. Bees are not offensive creatures, and a million of them might settle upon the naked person of the Kentucky giant, and he not be stung even once, were he to keep perfectly quiet; but were he to move, or endeavor to immediately assume the offensive-defensive mode of making war—that is, they would defend themselves by offending him—and probably sting him to death in a few minutes. Many many years ago, we lived hard by 'Squire S., in the town of Blank, Blank State, who kept a dozen hives of bees—we hadn't got learned enough then to have apiaries—all of which stood on long shelves under a monstrous palm-tree that was in the yard in front of the 'squire's house; and we never think of Plato and thyme, and Hymettus and the drowsy hum of bees, without being reminded of those dear honey-makers of the long, long ago—for the window at which we sat at school looked right out upon the hives, and there was always a delicious murmur going on among them that was as sweet as the nemorum murmur of the neighboring woods. Well one hot summer day, the old 'squire was standing before his hives, bareheaded and [illegible], like Elisha the [illegible]—but with bees, not boys (or bears) over him—and with nothing on him but his shirt and shoes and trousers, when the inhabitants or and welcome delicacy the [illegible] swarmed, and lit upon the venerable man's pate, which they covered in layers two or three inches deep, making his head-piece the most comical looking piece of humanity we ever [illegible] upon, so we never think of it without laughing, though the [illegible] some forty years ago, [illegible] as they walk [illegible] you think it is, and with young, madam, hand-some as it is. We suppose the bees mistook the 'squire's face for a gigantic full-blown rose, of a new pattern, which appeared to be looked into immediately, for it was of a most beautiful new rum dose, which the 'squire heightened by twelve daily applications of internal paint, a proper (or, rather, a common) practice enough in those ante (and anti) temperance times, when rum was rum and punch was perfect.

The 'squire was thoroughly up to the dodges of the apes, and so he stood still, as stiff as an iron ram rod that had stood the inspection of the great Frederick. Just then Mrs. S—— came to the door of the house, and seeing her husband in such a plight, gave the usual feminine speech for such cases made and provided, and then said to him, "Keep where you are, while I go and get the broom to brush 'em off." "I'm dead if I do!" thought the 'squire. He then managed to grope his way to a large tub that he had just previously filled with water from a neighboring brook for rinsing purposes, and which stood on a high bench. Into this water he dipped his head slowly until it was entirely immersed, and held it there, holding his breath at the same time, till every bee was made sufficiently stingless to have satisfied Mr. Eugene Wrayburn himself. The water swarmed with bees, and the old gentleman swarmed into the house, with the only white face he had had worn for almost half a century, and which he never repeated till he lay in his coffin. If, reader, you ever should be swarmed upon, do as the 'squire did, and prove the excellence of the water cure. If you could contrive to have the water iced, so much the better for you—and so much the worse for the bees.—Boston Traveller.

Official Neglect of Duty.

The people of the United States pay large salaries to certain officials for the performance of important public duties. Since the advent of President Grant's Administration, it has become the custom for the higher public servitors to leave their posts during the summer season and go wandering about the country, hobnobbing with axe-grinders at fashionable watering places, and dining and wining at each other's residences for weeks at a time. This wholesale neglect of duty is shameful, and there is no estimating the injury to the public service resulting from it. The whole civil service is apparently becoming demoralized by it, as a wide door is opened in almost every department, by the absence of its chief, for loose and corrupt practices.

Numerous instances have been afforded recently where fraudulent and corrupt practices might have been avoided if the acts of subordinates had been liable at any moment to the close scrutiny of their superiors. Without the constant supervision of those to whom the people entrust their affairs, and whom they hold responsible for a faithful performance of public duties, it is impossible to carry on the Government economically, efficiently, or honestly.

President Grant sets the example, and now the whole Cabinet and hosts of subordinates have shaken the dust of Washington from their feet. It may well be said that the Government is being run by irresponsible, and in hundred of instances incapable clerks. In their hunt for pleasure they defy public opinion and affect to despise the just criticism of the press. They neglect important public duty, or what is infinitely worse, transact it in an unsatisfactory and slipshod way by telegraph or mail. They wander about accepting hospitalities, attending horse races, yatch regattas, country fairs, and other pleasures, to the terror of local office-holders and disgust of thinking people. This is a pernicious custom, and one that does incalculable harm. It should be corrected at once.—New York Sun, Republican.

A Mistaken Idea Corrected.

Occasionally we come in contact with a Democrat who hesitates about accepting the situation or endorsing what is called the "new departure," upon the mistaken idea that to do so would be a confession of having occupied a false position in the past. This objection is well met by one of the ablest Democratic papers in Pennsylvania,— the Doylestown Democrat, which in a recent issues says:

"The ninth(new departure) resolution does not make us a convert to negro suffrage. If anything of the kind were attempted, we would treat it with contempt. We are as much opposed to the hersey of negro suffrage as we ever were and always shall be opposed to it. We believe this was intended for a white man's government, and think wrong has been done by changing the state of the negro; nevertheless this does not prevent us acknowledge that negroes actually vote. We do not want their votes. The Democratic party does not wish to, nor will it, run a race with the Radicals in proselyting negroes to its political faith. This is not our mission. We yield to the political situation, and recognize as part of the fundamental laws of the country what we cannot help recognizing. We do not go a step beyond this. In spite of the ninth resolution we mean to denounce negro suffrage whenever and whenever we please, but we do not intend to put it to our skirts at the expense of any of the live issues of the day. The power that made the new amendments a part of the Constitution can change them, and when that takes place we shall recognize its binding obligation."

You can buy, at the popular Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block, Ft Wayne, Ind., good all wool cassimere suits for ten dollars, better ones $15, and the best for $17. Call and see them.

[illegible] Matters.

The President does not show any anxiety to get back to Washington; and, at the date of this, there is no certainty of his coming or going. Everybody wishes he would come, for it is universally the opinion that the Boutwell-Pleasonton complications will be [illegible] up or [illegible] when he does come. It's a very dry subject, but it is here a very interesting one. It is the sort that inspires curiosity, not on account of principles or preference, but because of a morbid taste which is felt here for sensations.

Those who say that there is no real quarrel with Boutwell and Pleasonton, are simply [illegible]. There is such a quarrel between the two gentlemen that cannot be compromised. Boutwell has never shown so much feeling on any subject since he has been in the Cabinet. He charges openly to his friends and his officials equal that the Internal Revenue Bureau is full of corruption—that it is as rotten as hell and so on. He does not say that Pleasonton is corrupt, but I should not wonder if he had his doubts. He says he is a weak man with a muddled brain.

I did not think that Boutwell could manifest so much feeling on any subject, but he is furious at the mention of Pleasonton's name. From what I have seen, and I have watched very carefully, I am satisfied that he will surely retire unless Pleasonton is forced out.

Boutwell is prepared to show that Pleasonton, in addition to all his other faults, is disgracefully incompetent. He can show that during the six months which Pleasonton has held office, his collection of the taxes on whiskey has been something like eight millions less than for the six months preceding his entry into office. Both Boutwell and Pleasonton are waiting anxiously for the President to return, both being satisfied, as the public are also, that the trouble will be settled when the President returns, and each being confident that he will win. As the quarrel has reached that point where reconciliation is impossible, how can anybody suppose that Boutwell will not win? What use is Pleasonton to Grant, and what can Grant do without Boutwell? As much as the President is attached to Pleasonton personally, how can he throw aside his chances for renomination by supporting him and losing Boutwell. The latter, I am perfectly sure, has come to the point where he is indifferent. He can make nothing by staying with Grant, and can make nothing by leaving him: the chances of the benefit in the latter being better than in the former. Wait and see?

VINEGAR BITTERS
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

J. WALKER, Proprietor. R. H. McDONALD & Co., Druggists and Gen. Agents, San Francisco, Cal., and 32 Commerce Street, N. Y.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, [illegible] of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. [illegible]

The Victoria League need not send us any more circulars. We dont go a cent on Mrs. Victoria for President, not much.

LaGrange has a red brick house with blue window shutters, and yet she is not happy. She wants a railroad.

The late Bishop Luers, of Fort Wayne had his life insured for $10,000, in favor of an orphan asylum.

A Fort Wayne paper says there is a demand for a soap factory in that city. We think so too. By all means let them have one.

The Fort Wayne Gazette, calls that city dead. It did'nt make a bad looking corps last Saturday with its bustle and excitement. Mistake somewhere.

It is the prevailing opinion that more wheat was produced, in this county this season, than ever has been raised in one season before.

The auditor of Newton county has absconded, leaving affairs in his office in a muddled state, with five or six thousand dollars in money which does not belong to him.—Rochester Sentinel.

An over sensitive individual in Plymouth, named Philip Pott gets very angry when letters are addressed him with the initial of Philip instead of the word.—Goshen Democrat.

The side ditch along Main-st., opposite the Court House is in a terrible condition. A stagnant pool of green filthy water is not a very good disinfectant and unless it is attended to will no doubt produce a few cases of ague. Let it be drained.

We know a man who can produce rain at any time he wants to. All he has to do is to bet a five dollar note that it won't rain in a given period, and it is sure to come. He never won a bet in his life on the weather, or anything else.

Dr. Bory, at 92 Columbia-st, Ft. Wayne, one of the most successful Physician & Surgeons now living, for the treatment of chronic diseases, will be at Waterloo, at the Lent House, Thursday September 7th, Also on the 7th of each month thereafter.

An Iowa farmer, delirious with fever, jumped down a thirty-foot well, climbed out, and speedily recovered. And now all the doctors in his town wants all the wells filled up. They say if invalids adopt such a mode of treatment the physicians must starve.

New Daily—We are in receipt of a spicy Democratic sheet, called the Standard, published at New Albany, this State, by Messrs. Gwin, Kelso & Johnson. We are glad to see new Democratic papers, it speaks well for the State, and we hope this one will be financially as well as politically successful.

Fine Colt.—Messrs. Rainier & Ryan, have now in their possession one of the finest colts in Northern Indiana. It is of the stranger stock, and can make its mile in less time than it takes to shingle a meeting house. It is really a fine animal as is destined to make a good record as a trotter.

An editor having read in another paper that there is tobacco which, if a man smokes or chews, will make him forget that he owes a shilling in the world, innocently concludes that many of his subscribers have been furnished with the same article.

Successful.—The Festival last Saturday evening, at the Lutheran church, in Sedan, for the purpose of procuring means with which to purchase a bell, was quite largely attended, and passed off in most admirable manner. The receipts above all expenses were ninety-five dollars, a result that was highly gratifying.

Waterloo claims to have a magnetic spring equal to those of Michigan. Doubtless a hotel will go up near it for the accommodation of the public. The water has been tested for bathing purposes and found to possess medical virtues equal to other springs of similar character. We hope our neighbor will make good use of it.

The Ft. Wayne Journal, in speaking of Billy Williams, says:

"The voters of the 10th district will not consent to dispense with his services in Congress. He is sure to be renominated."

That's so, ain't it. He stands a much better chance of being struck by lightning than he does of being renominated, in this district.—Kendallville Standard.

A correspondent says:

Dear Editor:—Once more the spirit of prose has seized upon my corporal anatomy and animated its dormant, latent, quiescent energies to such a degree of ebullition of ponderous thought, creating such an indescribable desire to indite something, that I must either obey the mandates of its natural dictation or suffer through life the untold miseries of a shattered constitution and by-laws."

We think that is a clear case of worms.

Marriage Licenses.—The following licenses were issued at the Clerk's Office during the month of July:

[illegible] and [illegible]
Frank Appleton and Martha E. Trowbridge.
H. H. Case and Elizabeth Rosenberry.
Samuel Miller and Mary J. Shatzer.
Wm. Smith and Mary J. Wells.
Louis Fisher and Josephine Curtess.

Danl. W. Minier and Amanda E. Updegraff

W. H. McQuiston, who for the last five years has been in the employ of G. Orff & Co., as book-keeper, has gone to Auburn, Ind., and has engaged in the dry goods and grocery trade at that point. Mr. McQuistin is an active business man and has many friends in this city. He will be a valuable accession to the business community of the enterprising and go-a-head village of Auburn.—Fort Wayne Journal.

July has gone. Her sunny hours have witnessed the golden wheat gathered and garnered. The green meadows have become smooth before the ruthless sickle, and the hardy sons of toil have wiped the sweat from their manly face as they labored beneath her invigorating sunshine.—She ever greets us by ushering in our Independence day; she tells us that harvest time has come; she leaves us standing between the plow handles, looking out to the future for similar blessings.

Eel River Road.—We learn from Mr. Scanlan that about one month more will finish the grade on the Eel River road, from Columbia City to this place. About fifteen miles of track has been laid west from the above place and will be soon completed to Manchester. Tracklaying will commence next week east from Columbia City, and the work pushed speadily forward until they reach this place.

Writing Lessons.—Prof. Anderson, will attend the coming term of the Academy, at this place, and proposes to teach a class in penmanship, giving three lessons each week. Mr. A. has been very successful in the teaching of this art, and those desiring instruction inthis department cannot do better than to avail themselves of his services. Also those desiring instruction in book keeping will find the Professor a ready accountant, eminently qualified to give the desired information.

The awkward manner in which many newspaper correspondents use the word "we," when they refer to themselves, would be amusing were it not ridiculous. Editors use the plural number for the reason that they constantly speak as representatives of a party, and in such cases it is entirely admissible, but occasional writers would display much better taste by simply using "I," when they speak of themselves. It serves their purpose just as well and makes them appear much better to all good judges.

Our Academy.—This institution opens next Monday, under favorable auspices Quite a number of foreign scholars are expected to attend, and we have already had applications for rooms for their accommodation. Any of our citizens who can spare a room will readily find an occupant.

Postponement.—Owing to the illness of the principal, Wm. H. McIntosh, Esq., the opening of the Auburn Academy, heretofore announced to take place on Monday August 14th, has been postponed one week later, making it the 21st.

Court.—The Circuit Court commenced last Monday, Judge Tousley presiding. Several State cases were disposed of as follows:

State versus Jonas Emanuel, two indicments for violation of liquor laws. Acquitted, by jury.

State verses Edward Eldridge, two indictments for same offense. Acquitted.

State verses John Hebel, two indictments for same offense. No Judgment yet.

Noble County Fair.—We have received a list of the liberal premiums offered by the management of this society to contestants in the various and numerous articles that go to make it a number one fair. The citizens of adjoining counties will be entitled to all the rights and privileges accorded the citizens of Noble county and all are invited to enter for premiums. The Fair will take place at Ligonier, Sep., 27th, 28th, and 29th. We are under obligations to the gentlemanly officers for a season pass.

Trade is the life of a town, and when this is taken from it, it must necessarily die. Kendallville, Auburn and Waterloo are being swallowed up by Fort Wayne. We are told that in Kendallville there are now over one hundred empty houses—Steuben Republican.

If empty houses are an indication that the business of a place has been taken from it, then ours has not departed, for there is not a single house vacant, while the demand for them is still on the increase. No, sir, we enjoy a good local trade, and everything desirable is on the increase, such as houses, stores, manufactories, babies and business generally.

LOST.

On Saturday, August 5th, 1871, between Kendallville and Auburn, by way of Coruna road, a pocket account book containing two notes and other papers belonging to Bell & Emerson, Toledo, Ohio: There is nothing of value in the book to any person except the owners. Any person returning this book and papers by express or otherwise, to Bell & Emerson, Toledo, Ohio, or S. J. H. Loomis, of Kendallville, will be rewarded for their trouble, beside conferring a great favor on J. B. Kimball.

Cheese Manufactory.—I am now manufacturing cheese for the trade, and have on hand a large lot, which I warrant good, not made of skimmed milk. My cows are fed on tame grass, clover and timothy and fresh pure water—no stagnant swamp water on the farm. I use Roe's patent premium cheese vat with improved heater, the best in the world, also Roe's improved ever and weight cheese press, patent expansion hoops, &c. I am now selling at 1 and 14 cents per pound. Dairy one-fourth mile south of Auburn, on the Fort Wayne road. J. Stamets.

Having a buyer in New York all the time buying goods for cash only, the Red Front Clothing House can substantiate all it advertises and sells goods cheaper than other houses can buy them for.

For good soda water go to Davenprt's Drug Store.

Good Manners.—Of all the acts of man which go to give others an estimate of his character, his deportment in a public assembly, is the surest method of determining whether he is a gentleman or a loafer. If you see a person quietly, and reverently approach a church door, or any place of assembly, respectfully take off his hat, walk lightly and with dignity up the aisle, quietly take a seat, and remain during the service, you may set that man down a gentleman at heart. This deportment tells more even, than that he is a sympathizer with the object of the meeting, for a gentleman will always act thus even if he disapproves of the meeting, but being accustomed to good society, and having respect for himself and the feelings of his fellow man, his natural impulses lead him to treat all assemblies of every character with respect. You need go no further than our churches of a Sabbath evening to draw a line of distinction between the true gentleman and the awkward boor. Notice that fell stumbling in after the exercises have commenced. He will go out likely before the sermon is half over. He likes to disturb as many as posible at a time. There comes another walking on tip toes. He means business, and will stay and listen and doubtless enjoy the service.

Real Estate.—Some of our property holders are getting very high in their ideas, of the values of real estate, in this place. There is nothing that will retard the growth of a town so much as a disposition of this kind upon the part of its citizens. Every man has a right to secure full value for his property, but when he adds to the present the prospective value then he over steps the bounds of reason and becomes exhorbitant. There is quite a large amount of property here today, that would receive valuable improvements, in a short time, could it be purchased at a reasonable figure, but this is refused, and it will remain in its present dilapidated condition for several years perhaps, without benefiting the proprietor or public generally. This is one of the meanest spirits to contend with in the building up of a place, and acts like a curse in the community in which it is exhibited. Some of our citizens are unable to improve their property, yet they will hold on to it in hopes of realising the largest possible amount, gained by improvements adjacent to it. We have some very fine locations for business houses, and capital enough to put them up, but they are held at prices beyond all reason, and the enterprise fails. Every new building adds to the value of our place, and we suppose these extortioners will hold on until enough has been added to increase the value of their property. When we have a little less of this spirit in our midst we shall make greater progress, and build up a town worthy the enterprise of a majority of her citizens.

Butler Correspondent.

Butler, Ind., August 7th, 1871.

Editor Courier.—Being in town on Saturday last, I had the pleasure of taking a look at your interesting paper.—Among other items I noticed a solicitation for readers to forward you the local news of their towns or neighborhoods.—Below I give you a few items for publication if you think them of sufficient interest to occupy space in your columns:

JURY TRIAL.

Our legal fraternity had an excellent chance to display the "soundness of their phylosophy," last week, on the lamb suit between Collins and Houts, two farmers residing about four miles north-west of town, which has occupied their attention a number of days. Two hearings have been had, the Jury disagreeing at each time. At the last trial, which ended on Saturday, their were nine in favor of Collings and three for Houts. They both still claim the lamb, and it will probably be an old sheep before the matter is settled.

COW KILLED.

A cow belonging to Mr. A. May was thrown from the railroad track, east of town on Thursday, and instantly killed. Mr. M. is a poor man, has a large family to support, and it was the only cow he had.

RUNAWAY.

Mr. Allen Shultz' team took freight a few days since, throwing him from the wagon, bruising him quite badly. He is able to be around by the use of crutches.

BOY RAN OVER.

A little boy, son of Mr. A. French, residing in the suburbs of Packertown, while riding home on Saturday evening, jumped from the wagon nearly opposite his home, and before the driver could stop his horses, the hind wheel ran over the little fellow's leg below the knee. Fortunately, for the boy, the wagon was not heavily loaded, and no bones were broken.

EGGS.

Mr. John Blaker, informs me he has bought and shipped, from Butler this summer, eight hundred barrels of eggs. Allowing 70 dozen to the barrel, he has shipped 56,000 dozen or 672,000 eggs.

RATS.

Mr. Sidney Jones, residing about five miles north of Butler, raised his barn not long since to rid it of rats. He met with complete success, killing one hundred and ninteen rats, and it was not a very good day for rats either!

ELEVATED.

H. E. Gordon, while pitching off a load of hay, with a horse hay fork, last week, got tangled in the top, and was drawn up to the big beam by one leg. The horse was backed up, and he came down all right and went to work as though nothing had happened.

A Noble Benefaction.

The Trustees of the Louisville Medical College, (Louisville, Ky.) have created one of the most liberal and noble benefactions ever conferred by a public institution upon any people. The Trustees of this college have instituted one beneficiary scholarship for each Congressional District in the Southern and surrounding States. By this means very many poor but deserving young men will be enabled to obtain a thorough medical education Any one wishing to take advantage of this Benefaction which is worth to each student at least $ 00, has only to write to Dr. E. S. Gaillard, Dean of the Faculty of the Louisville Medical College, Louisville Ky., who will receive a college catalogue with full information in regard to all that is necessary for him to do to secure one of these scholarships. With proper and welcome delicacy the names of those who have secured the Beneficiary Scholarship will be known only to the Dean of the Faculty. It is unnecessary to commend those who have established these noble Beneficiary Scholarships. Their act will bring them commendation wherever it is known.

In accordance with the old Hippocratic oath, forbidding physicians to charge the families of each other for the services rendered, the Faculty of this college will make no charge for teaching sons of physicians, and, as no physician charges a clergyman's family the sons of clergymen will receive the same privilege. The next College session begins October 2d, 1871. As the lecture fees charged for each student who has not obtained a Beneficiary Scholarship, amounts to $120, annually, the public can appreciate the munificence of this benefaction.

Horace Greeley says if you wish to keep a town from thriving, don't put up any more buildings than you can conveniently occupy yourself. If you should accidentally have an empty dwelling, and anyone should want to rent it, ask three times the actual value of it. Demand a Shylock price for every spot of ground that God has given you stewardship over. Turn a cold shoulder to every mechanic or manufacturer seeking a home among you. Look upon every new comer with a frown and run down the work of every new workman. Go abroad for wares rather than deal with those who seek to do business in your midst. Refuse to advertise or in any other way support your county papers, so people abroad may not know whether any business is being done in the town or not. Wrap yourselves up within yourselves and cover yourselves up with a coat of impervious selfishness.—There is no more effectual way to retard the growth of a town than by actions like the above, and there are people in every town who are pursuing this course every day of their lives, and to whom the above remarks are most respectfully offered for their earnest and careful attention.

Beware of Counterfeits.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All persons should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to one house in Fort Wayne this fall. Most goods and lowest prices.

Aug. 3,

Death of the Double Baby.

The death of the double baby at Boston is announced.

It presented the remarkable as well unprecedented phenomenon of two heads, four arms and two legs, and all upon a single body. The girl—for such its sex—died last evening at No. 6 Bowdoin street. The first half or head breathed its last at 5, and the second shortly after 8 o'clock. The child—or children as it would almost seem proper to allude to the phenomenon—had enjoyed excellent health from her birth, nine months ago, until within two weeks, at which time one exhibited signs of illness. This, however, was but temporary. It recovered and was bright and playful. Since, reaching Boston, a few days since, the other—or other half—was taken sick and died yesterday afternoon, as already stated. The two portions of the body were so intimately connected that the death one of one rendered that of the other inevitable. The spectacle was equally novel, strange, and unparalleled. Upon one end of the body reposed the head of the dead infant; upon the other that of the live one with its eyes still bright and curious, and its lungs in full breathing order. All that medical aid could accomplish was done, but it was found unavailing. The child died in the presence of its parents. The corpses present the appearance of two infants asleep. Apparently they escaped the ordinary suffering incident to death, for the countenance had the expression of repose.

MARKLEY SHRDVER & CO

A writer in the English Naturalist's Note-book, who has recently witnessed the feeding of the serpents in the Zoological Gardens in London, [illegible] that they are fed once a week, though some of them, and in particular the pythons, do not take their food so often, but will [illegible] to fast for weeks [illegible].

Disregarding the scientific divisons of the order which comprises these animals, we may divide them into three classes; firstly, those which seize their prey with their teeth, and crush in their folds; secondly, those which seize and swallow it alive, after the manner of lizards; and, thirdly, those which bite, or rather strikes it with poisonous fangs. Of the first the finest examples are the pythons and boas, besides which there are the yellow snakes of the West Indies and others. Those of the second are fewer in number: they include the rat snake of Bengal, viperine snake, English snake etc. The present specimens of the third classes include [illegible], and Indian and Egyptian cobras, water vipers, etc.

The constricting serpents, as we may term them, are kept in large cages, the entrance to which is either by a glass door in front, which opens by a sliding up, or by a similar contrivance at the back, in the wooden partition. The colubrine snakes are, in some of these cases generally, and indeed are so harmless that little precaution is needed. The venomous serpents have no opening but a small [illegible] of these case, about two or three inches square. Through this their food is introdqed and all necessary operations for the cleanliness and order of the interior are performed [illegible] stout wire, [illegible] the occupants, who, if new-comers, strike at it vigorously with their fangs. The first to be fed were the yellow snakes and other species in [illegible] case. The keeper, having unceremoniously removed the b'ankets, beneath which most of the occupants of the compartment were huddled together, as usual, quickly introduced under the glass door about a dozen sparrows and one or two Guinea-pigs. The former immediately retired to the darkest corners, seeming, however, to be quite unconscious of the presence of the snakes [illegible] they [illegible] the bodies of the latter, which for the most parts remained motionless. The Guinea-pigs were more restless, moving slowly about as if in search of food. They seemed to be preferred by the snakes to the sparrows; and presently one of the reptiles, waiting his opportunity, seized a Guinea-pig by the neck, and, jerking [illegible] three folds around it, killing it in a few seconds.

The other snakes rapidly dispatched the sparrows in the same way [illegible] seized; but they were apparently in no hurry, as there was a number of birds in the corner for more than an hour, which had not been touched during that time. It may be well to remark that there is nothing revolting in the spectacle of a serpent [illegible]. Its victim suffers neither the mental nor bodily torture ordinarily supposed. When seized, it is killed without delay, especially if it struggles [illegible] its seizure it is never conscious of danger. Not only is this well known to those [illegible] tures, [illegible] al and careful observation. A rabbit will approach a snake out of mere curiosity, [illegible] and even being touched by its tongue, will start to another part of the enclosure, and resume its composure, returning again in the course of its explorations to the same snake, without the least uneasiness except what arises from a want of cabbage-leaves and the indigestibility of the gravel flooring. Guinea-pigs shows even less concern and are not easily startled by any moving object.

The [illegible] which had seized their sparrows, etc. waited till their prey was quite dead before they uncoiled, and began slowly to prepare for swallowing it. The pythons, which occupied an adjoining [illegible] pents in the collection, were next supplied with two or three ducks. The largest python instantly seized one, and threw one fold round it. He then remained perfectly motionless, appearing to be satisfied with having secured the bird, and did not at once kill it. The duck did not seem at first concerned at such unusual treatment, but soon became restless, on which the python tightened the fold, and in about a minute had quite destroyed it. Having waited for [illegible] to make sure that life was extinct, he slowly unwound his coil from the body, and touched it with his muzzle, moving it about until he had found the head. The idea of lubrication with saliva, now quite exploded, [illegible] from this [illegible] body with the mouth. Having taken the [illegible] low the carcass, his jaws stretching to an immense extent [illegible] sage. When he found any difficulty, he used the part of his body which lay nearest to it to push it gently, and, considering the apparent difficulty, was not long in accomplishing the meal. The supply of food is never stinted, and we believe that it is not uncommon for a python to devour six or eight ducks and rabbits on one day. Of course a full meal takes a long period to digest, as is the case with all reptiles.

The colubrine snakes might with propriety be determined legless lizards, as, with [illegible] of the want of limbs, they [illegible] in structure to the saurians. A fine, lively specimen, of the Bengal rat snake was fed with half a dozen frogs, which he pursued with great speed round [illegible] and, [illegible] them one by one into a corner, seized and swallowed them in spite of their struggles.

The keeper [illegible] young Guidea-pigs into the case containing the rattlesnakes, one of the snakes instantly struck at that nearest [illegible]. The action of a venomous serpent in wounding [illegible] strictly called a bite, as, though the fangs undoubtedly represent teeth, the jaws are not closen upon the object simply [illegible] retiring immediately. The Guinea-pig almost immediately showed signs of giddiness, but its body did not appear to swell; it seemed to be thrown into violent convulsions, and in [illegible] minute fell, [illegible] no other sign of life than occasional spasmodic motion of its jaws. A larger animal would not have been so soon killed; but as the snakes, being confined, have not often occasion to use their venom, it is probably more powerful than while they are in a wild state. There are a large number of puff adders [illegible] a Guinea-pig [illegible] sniffing [illegible] usual, but though he was touching one of the reptiles, it did not seem disposed to strike, when suddenly another puff-adder darted at full length from the opposite corner, and striking the creature, remained with its fangs apparently burried in its flesh [illegible]ary, we believe, to the usual habit of the reptile. His intention was perhaps, to prevent any other [illegible] from devouring it.

There are specimens of the two species of cobras, the the India and Egyptian [illegible] the most interesting of all serpents; but, on account of their excitable nature, it was found necessary to hide them partially from view by filling the lower half of [illegible] case-front with ground glass, so that [illegible] to observe them. The appearance of the cobra [illegible] the fatal stroke is graceful, and yet terrible to see. The [illegible] hood, the waving motion of the head, and the peculiar expression of the eye, combine to impress the observer of its consciousness of the deadly power which it possesses and with which it threatens any living creature that dares approach it.

[illegible] efforts of the patriots of '76, the organization of a government devolved upon them. In the first confederation of States they failed. Then [illegible] more perfect union they adopted the Constitution of the United States. Even then there were different opinions as to the true relations of the States to the Union—one of a perfect union, another of simple union of [illegible] States [illegible] sovereigns. And [illegible] only amid the [illegible] of cannon and clash of swords was the dispute settled. [illegible] of battle, and it was decided that the Union is Sovereign over the States. The smoke of battle is dispelled; and we find among those who in the strife aided to establish our government on the basis of a consolidated union now despairing [illegible] overthrow [illegible]. My voice is [illegible] give up the ship. Though, during the fearful storm that rages around her she may have lost spars and masts, though she may have some cracked ribs, for myself, I will be one of the gallant crew,—though the storm rages, though spars and masts are gone, though the ribs be broken, [illegible] except [illegible] amendments as new masts, spars and ribs, and until the noble vessel is swallowed up by the destroying waves, continue with you in the patriotic cry of "Long live the Republic!" never forgetting that it was "the right of the people to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such priciples, and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness." [illegible]

An Elmira man relates a little of his recent experiences in the following touching strain: [illegible] went to a drug-store [illegible] morning for a dose of morphine for a sick friend. The night-clerk objected to giving it to me without a prescription, [illegible] dently [illegible] myself. 'Pshay,' said I, 'do I look like a man who would kill myself?' Gazing at me steadily [illegible] he replied, '[illegible] know. Seems to me, if I looked like you, I should be greatly tempted to kill myself.'

If you know anything that will make a brother's heart glad, run quick and tell it; but if it is a thing that will cause a sigh, bottle it up.

"Chuck Me Out."

Among the first-class restaurants in Boston, is one in S—— street, kept by W——. Among the visitors who enjoyed [illegible] was a semi-clerical [illegible] who ordered up a broiled quail and a dozen fried oysters. While discussing these delicacies, he touched the bell, and requested the waiter to send the proprietor. [illegible] colloquy with Mr. W—— about matters and things in general.

[illegible] 'I saw you in an altercation with [illegible] day evening last?'

'He contracted a bill to the amount of two dollars, and then refused to pay [illegible]'

'[illegible] you do with him?'

'Chucked him out of doors.'

'Nothing else?'

'No; going to law don't pay. To [illegible] two dollars' worth of money [illegible] would have consumed ten dollars' worth of time.'

'Then all you [illegible] chuck them out, as you say?'

'That's all.'

'Well, that may be a wise plan, but I doubt it.'

'By the way, what kind of wine have you got?'

'As good an article of Heidsick as you can find in this city. Will you [illegible] you will join me [illegible]'

'With pleasure, sir.'

The bell was again tingled—a white jacket appeared in the doorway—the white jacket vanished. In a moment the white jacket reappeared, bringing in a silver top on a juvenile silver. The wine was poured out, duly iced, and disposed of. In a few moments after this, W—— begged to be excused, and he left his friend to finish up the quail. The friend did so, and then reappeared in the barroom.

'Where can I find a little water to dip my fingers in?'

'In the washbowl by the looking-glass.'

The stranger crossed the room, took a wash, brushed up his whiskers, adjusted his white cravat, and once more sought the proprietor.

'Mr. W——, I have really enjoyed myself. I cannot recollect when I have ever relished wine and quail with a greater zest.'

'Happy to hear you say so.'

'As a memento of the little repast, I have one slight favor to ask.'

'What is it?'

'Chuck me out.'

'What?'

'Chuck me out.'

'You don't mean to say that you have been doing me?'

'I don't mean to say anything else. I have not got the first red cent; and if you want your pay for the quail, oysters and wine, you must do as I said before, chuck me out.'

W—— could hear no more. He made a rush to the kitchen to get the cheese knife. While he was absent, our semi-clerical friend slipped out the side door, and when last seen was rushing north, at the rate of fourteen miles an hour.

Joe Coburn, the pugilist, got into a difficulty with a gambler named George McCloud, in a Bowery saloon, last Wednesday, when [illegible] drew a pistol. In the struggle to wrest it from McCloud's hand it was discharged, the ball inflicting a slight wound in Coburn's temple, and [illegible] before it struck a passing stranger in the [illegible].

Eating Green Corn.

Last autumn persons who wished to observe "the proprieties," inquired of [illegible] according to [illegible] usage to gnaw the corn from the cob, or if it should be cut into the plate. Generally, though not always, matters of table etiquette are founded in common sense. A bird can only be properly enjoyed by picking it, hence good usage sanctions the use of the fingers in removing the flesh from the bones of a bird, while one who should take the bone of a beefsteak, or a mutton chop, in his fingers, would be looked upon as ill-bred. The only way to get full satisfaction out of green corn is to gnaw it from the cob, and though the operation especially to a foreigner who knows not corn, is not an elegant one to witness, it is performed at the best-ordered tables. So generally is it conceded that corn should be eaten from the cob, that silversmiths now make [illegible] which are thrust into the large end of the cob, and [illegible] without soiling the fingers. It is rather an awkward matter to cut the corn from the ear at table, especially if the knives are not sharp. If it is to be eaten in this way, it should be prepared before it is sent to the table. The operation of eating from the cob is much facilitated by drawing a sharp knife lengthwise of each row of kernels [illegible] when this is done, the digestible, nutritious contents of the kernel will slip out, and the often tough hull be left upon the cob. Those whose teeth are sensitive or defective will find this a great help.—American Agriculturist.

'Salt' is the subject of a schoolboy's latest composition: 'The salt is a [illegible] which spoils the potatoes [illegible] I forget [illegible]'

OVER THE BARS.

[illegible] the cows came up
[illegible] with clover,
And stood in the lane, while pretty Jane,
Had a quiet chat with the drover—
Such a quiet chat that it scarcely seemed
That a single word was spoken;
While a magic spell with the night dew fell,
A [illegible]

The cattle stood at the lover's side,
Without any show of vexation,
As though impressed that a five bar rest
Was a part of their rest-oration,
And as Jane listened to the note that came
[illegible]

[illegible]
Should never prevent her uniting.
So over the bars the lovers lean,
In the joy of their [illegible];
And their looks declare that poverty ne'er
Shall be a bar to their union;
O, sweetest music, on thread your rhymes

Bewitched the heart of the drover.

The first claim against the United States by a subject of a great Britain, under the [illegible] Washington, was filed with the British agent at Washington on Saturday. It is that of James Coutcherts, a resident of the District of Columbia, and involves a large sum. He is a British subject, and [illegible] of the war, seized his [illegible] factory, near the railroad depot, for military purposes, by which the machinery was rendered useless, and profitable business destroyed, besides other injuries to his property.

The so-called KuKlux trial at Memphis, before United States Commissioner Garrett, [illegible] four men, named Smiley, Chapman, Bessier and Fodd were arraigned for the murder of a man named Garrett, in Saulsbury, Tennessee, last June, terminated on Friday [illegible] the honorable acquittal of all the parties, there being no shadow of evidence against them. The [illegible] who instituted the prosecution have been arrested for perjury, and will also be called to defend themselves against an indictment charging them with having murdered Garrett.

On Sunday, the 30th ultimo, the congregation at a colored church, Jefferson county, [illegible] an old colored man who dressed himself in the garb of a KuKlux, and entered the building in the midst of the services. Every person in the house made a rush for the door and took to the woods, as the old man [illegible] the peculiar garb, leaving the preacher, who continued to exhort his imaginary hearers. Advancing toward the preacher the old negro gave him a sound cowhiding, and left the house and preacher. He was arrested yesterday and fined $10 for disturbing the worshipers and $25 for cursing the preacher, besides costs and a lecture on his misconduct. This will doubtless find its way into Northern Radical papers, distorted into a KuKlux outrage.

One of the exhibitors at the great Texas State Fair, at Houston, gives an amusing account of his experience at the hotel, which illustrates the crowded condition of the public houses at that time.

'Say, stranger,' says I, 'if I had to carry a thing like that, blamed if I wouldn't get it on wheels.'

'Guess if I choose to wear it, it's nobody's business,' he replied.

'Well,' says I, 'is all of this artillery company in this room?'

The next night, after we had all turned in there came a rap at the door; the beds were all full but one and in this there was a tall Texan, who, after the rapping had been repeated [illegible]

'Halloo, Colonel, just got in? I would say.

'Yes, just in, and luckily enough to get a room.

'What's your number?' I would ask.

'Ninety one,' was sure to be the reply.

'I stayed there until they began to pass the new arrivals in through the transom, and then I left town.'

Jake Johnson had a mule. There was nothing remarkable [illegible] but there was something peculiar about the mule. He—the animal—could kick higher, hit harder, on the slightest provocation, and act uglier than [illegible] on record.

'Reckon so. [illegible] you Jim Boggs, [illegible] in this country. Paid $500 for him.'

'Great smash! Is that so?' ejaculated Jim.

'Solid truth, every word of it. Tell you confidentially, Jim, I'm taking him down for betting purposes. I bet he can kick a fly off from any man without its hurting him.'

'Now, look here, squire,' says Jim, 'I'm not a betting character, but I'll bet you something on that.'

'Jim there's no use; don't bet. I don't want to win your money.'

'Don't be alarmed squire, I'll take such bets as that every time.'

'Well, if you are determined to bet, I will risk a small stake—say five dollars.'

'All right, squire, you're my man. But who'll he kick the fly off? There is [illegible] but you and I. You try it.'

'No,' says Johnson, 'I have to be by the mule's head to order him.'

'Oh! yes,' says Jim. 'Then probably [illegible] I'll do it; but you are to bet ten against my five, if I risk it.'

'All right,' quoth the squire. 'Now, there's a fly on your shoulder. Stand still.' And then Johnson adjusted the mule.

'Whist, Jersey,' said he.

The mule raised his heels with such velocity and force that Boggs rose in the air like a bird, and alighted on all fours in a muddy ditch, bang up against a [illegible].

'Not so fast, Jim; Jersey did just what I said he could; that is, kick a fly off a man without its hurting him. You see, the mule is not injured by the operation. However, if you are not satisfied, we will try it again as often as you wish.'

CATCHING A TARTAR.

A Tradition of Sweden.

Charles the XII. of Sweden, surnamed on account of his warlike propensities, by his admirers, the 'Lion of the North,' and by his detractors, with equal justice, the 'Madman of the North,' accidentally encountered at the Chateau Gortz, a young creature from the banks of the Volga, a niece of Baron Gortz. So powerful was the impression she almost made upon the hitherto impregnable heart of the hero, so completely was he spell-bound by her charms, that he seemed to lose all recollection of other matters, even of the disastrous battle of Pultowa.

The cause of his sudden [illegible] was the Princess Ikla—for she was a princess, her mother, the Baron's sister, having married the Hetman of the Tartars. Being left an orphan [illegible] she had taken up her residence with Baron Gortz at [illegible].

The Baron was a bit of a historian—or thought he was—and was then engaged in writing a history of the King, who called upon him so often to revise and correct the work. Besides, the Baron was one of the Crown of Councillors, and was often entrusted with important business of the State.

Charles the XII. had that desire which seems inherent in the breast of greatness—he wished to be loved for himself alone, without any regard to its state and grandeur. Consequently, he had himself presented to Ikla under the simple title of Count D'Olfen, and in that name paid [illegible] Tartar princess, for her Tartar blood made her disregard many of the conventionalities of life, though her uncle often declared that she had the blood of the Gortzes full in her veins, and as no more of a Tartar than he was—and there was not much of the Kalmuck about him.

Baron Gortz was highly delighted at the prospect of becoming the uncle of the King; but that delight was tempered by a wholesome dread of his prospective nephew-in-law. For, stripping off the dazzling veil of his military glory, he must acknowledge that the 'Lion of the North' was an unmitigated tyrant, and ruled his subjects in a very arbitrary manner.

Baron Gortz had proof of this one day when he received a letter from the King. It contained these words:

'Baron de Gortz: Information has reached me that the captain of Hubans, Gustavus Reinold, who was condemned to death for the neglect of orders at the battle of Pultowa, but who escaped before the execution of his sentence, has been seen in Stralsund.—Write instantly to the Governor; tell him I hold him responsible for the apprehension of this traitor. Within five minutes of his being taken and identified, let him be shot. And the person in whose house he shall be found shall forthwith be shot. CHARLES.'

This letter troubled the good old Baron sorely, for his niece had made him promise to intercede for this identical young officer. He broke into a cold perspiration when he reflected that if he did so he should get himself shot for his pains. He wished heartily in his heart that the King and Ikla were married, because then he should be his uncle, and he could never think of shooting one of the royal family.

He wrote the order to the Governor and sent it by a servant, who informed him that an officer of the police wished to speak to him. Wondering at this he hastened to the hall below. On his return he found Ikla, a sylphid, dark-haired, dark-eyed gipsy of a woman, gazing listlessly from the large bay-window into the street below. She noticed that he was in a state of perturbation.

'What is the matter?' she asked.

'I want to put you on your guard,' he exclaimed, breathlessly. 'The police have sent to say they have reason to believe that a young man is concealed somewhere in my chateau.'

'I know it,' answered Ikla, coolly. 'I concealed him.'

'You,' exclaimed the astonished Baron. 'Who is he?'

'Gustavus Reinold.'

The Baron uttered a dismal groan.

'Ikla, you have murdered me!' he cried, and sank feebly into a chair.

'Not so bad as that, I hope,' she replied, smilingly.

'I tell you that whoever harbors the traitor is to be shot—and so much! [illegible]' and the Baron groaned again. 'What made you take so fatal an interest in this wretched young man?'

'His misfortunes,' replied Ikla.—'He is innocent; I know it, my dear mother, your sister, [illegible] knew it also. Forced by a cruel and unjust sentence to fly his country, he sought refuge in ours.'

'Then why the deuce did he leave it?'

'To follow me when you sent for me. Finding the pursuit so hot, I thought the best asylum for him was your chateau.'

At this moment a servant entered the room and announced Count D'Olfen.

'There is but one chance for us all,' he exclaimed, 'marry the Count, and then—' he checked himself abruptly.

'If it depends on that, our chance is small,' she returned roguishly; 'but listen to me—obey me, and all will yet be well. I intend to play a desperate game; if I win, I shall save a life of far more value than my own.'

She held a rapid conference with the Baron, and though he listened to her at first with astonishment and alarm, she finally won him over to her purpose, and he promised to assist her, though it was with fear and trembling. But he had pretty well made up his mind by this time that he should be shot any way, and he thought that it did not make much difference for what.

He withdrew, and Charles the XII. as Count D'Olfen, entered the room. He wore the uniform of his favorite regiment; a light blue coat trimmed with gold, and the corners of the skirts turned back; high boots of black leather, to which a formidable pair of spurs were attached; a three-cornered black hat; a black stock; buff gauntlets and a heavy sword. He looked more like a warrior equipped for the field than a lover seeking a lover's [illegible].

He felt like a timid schoolboy in the presence of this exquisite beauty who had stormed the outworks of his heart, and penetrated to the very citadel. Charles the Twelfth!

In her turn Ikla also had her reflections.

'He seeks a Tartar,' she thought; 'he shall find one.'

'What, Count,' she exclaimed, 'in regimentals? How devoted you must be to the king.'

'Well I am,' he exclaimed; 'came here, as well as I can recollect, to tell you how devoted I am to you—confess my self awkward in such matters. Never cared for woman before I saw you.'

'Why count, you must be the very counterpart of the king,' cried Ikla, coquettishly. 'They say he hates women.'

'He does no such thing,' [illegible].

'How do you know?' she asked harshly.

'I think I know him.'

'You might as well say you think you know yourself.'

'How,' he said suspiciously.

'Which no man does.'

'Oh, I know you at all events. I know you, what a talking, striking, bewitching little creature you are. Above all I know how I love you. I am a plain, blunt soldier, and like to know the worst that can happen to me. Do you love me?'

'Is that the worst that can happen to you?' she asked demurely.

'Ikla, I generally get the best of it at blows; but I own you beat me at words. Shall simply return to the charge. Do you love me?'

'Must have proof of you love before I answer that.'

'What proof?'

'Would you grant and little whim of mine?'

'Certainly.'

'Don't make any rash promises.'

'I swear it.'

Ikla laughed cheerfully, went into an adjoining room, and brought forth an antique costume, such as had been worn by the dames of fifty years ago.

'Have the greatest desire see how you would look dressed as my grandmother,' she cried.

The king was appalled.

'Death and the dev—' he began.

'Oh, fie, no swearing in a lady's presence,' she said, checking him. 'But I am glad I have discovered what your love amounts to.'

He expostulated with her, and ended, as common mortals do, in submitting to a woman's will.

She then dressed him in a heavy brocade dress, and tied the high, starched cap tightly under his chin.

'Faugh!' he cried in disgust, 'this dress makes me smell like a musk-rat.'

'You don't like perfumes then?'

'No—yes; one—gunpowder. Like Charles the Twelfth, there's is no perfume for me but gunpowder.'

'Oh, I wish I were his wife,' exclaimed she fervently.

He regarded her, in a pleased surprise.

'What, are you in love with the king?'

'Oh, no. Only one might be be inclined to sacrifice one's self for the good of one's country.'

Charles smiled grimly.

'You are vastly condescending,' he replied. 'And pray, what else would you do for the good of your country?'

'Would soften his character. Would tame this lion; and he should soon be as much beloved as he is already admired and feared.'

'And how is this to be accomplished?' inquired Charles.

'Sit down and let me tell you. There now you must fancy yourself Charles the Twelfth.'

'Well, I do,' he answered with a significant smile.

'Considering me the queen,' she said, and drew a chair beside him.

'Go on,' he cried, rather pleased with the conceit.

'Should devote my life to obtaining and securing his entire confidence.'

'We will suppose you have [illegible].'

'Would then use it to make him submit on all fitting occasions to my sovereign will. Would teach him the true value of his noblest prerogative.'

'Which is——'

'Mercy.'

'Come, come, Charles the Twelfth is severe, but he is just.'

'Not always. Witness the case of Capt. Reinold.'

Charles started and glanced at her suspiciously.

'What do you know of the culprit,' he cried.

'His sentence is unjust,' she answered firmly, and, therefore, a fit object for the interference of the queen.'

She arose, went to the table, and took a paper from it. 'Now, if I were queen, I would approach the the king as I do you, with this [illegible] hand.' She walked [illegible] dignity. 'Would say to him, [illegible] honor and your [illegible].'

He took the paper from her in surprise and looked at it [illegible].

'A pardon for Captain Reinold,' he exclaimed, [illegible] grily. 'Indeed, [illegible] friend, if I were Charles the Twelfth, this would be my answer.'

He tore up the paper.

Nothing discouraged, Ikla [illegible] atly drew another from her pocket.

'Then,' she said, [illegible] feet [illegible] Sweden, your eyes are [illegible] justice, but by [illegible] Reinold was entrusted [illegible] he found the battle of Pultowa [illegible] he would only have caused [illegible] of the Swedish princes by the [illegible] less Russians. For this [illegible] he did not deliver it, and [illegible] red your majesty's displeasure.'

'I desire to know the reason of the extraordinary interest you take in this young man.'

'You shall know,' [illegible] ed, 'when you have promised to obtain his pardon from the king.'

'I will make no such promise,' cried Charles, sternly.

A timid knocking at the door disturbed them. Ikla would have opened it, but Charles, aware of the ridiculous manner in which he was dressed, restrained her. Then the voice of the baron was heard, in very [illegible] accents, declaring that the royal council was assembled, and awaited [illegible].

Charles, in dismay, begged Ikla to remove the dress, for he found it impossible to do so; but she only laughed at his predicament.

'Wretched girl,' he [illegible] angrily, 'you have forced me to [illegible] myself. I am the king.'

But she only laughed [illegible].

'Sire,' she answered, with a low curtsey, 'I have known it from the first. Sign the pardon, and I will at once [illegible].'

The king was obliged to acknowledge himself fairly vanquished. He signed the pardon, and Ikla released him from the obnoxious garments. Then she admitted her uncle and informed the king that he was [illegible] council there was assembled, and reassured the poor baron who looked half frightened to death for the share he had taken in the little plot.

'Baron de Gortz,' said Charles, 'for certain reasons I have pardoned Captain Reinhold. Let this pardon be sent to him at once.'

Ikla took the pardon.

'There is no occasion to send it, sir. I can deliver it myself,' said she archly. 'Gustavus is concealed in this cheateau.'

'Gustavus again,' cried the king sharply. 'Is this man your lover?'

'He is; and would have been my husband.' 'Then you have deceived me in evey way.'

'No, sire you deceived yourself.—Had I been ambitious, I might have sealed your ruin; I have saved Sweden from a queen who would not have been worthy of her, and restored [illegible] a king who [illegible].'

He was determined she should not beat him in every way.

'Ikla,' he exclaimed, 'I will restore Reinhold to favor, and make him a colonel, and, as I [illegible] my doubts about [illegible] No doubt he will teach him to obey orders in future; and may he not find——'

'What?'

A Touching Story.

In the cemetery at Nashville, Tenn., a stranger was seen planting a flower over a soldier's grave. When asked:

"Was your son buried there?"

"No," was the answer.

"Your son-in-law?"

"No."

"A brother?"

"No."

"A relative?"

"No."

After a moment's pause the stranger laid down a small board which he held in his hand and said:

"Well, I will tell you. When the war broke out I was a farmer in Illinois. I wanted to enlist, but I was poor. I had a wife and seven children. I was drafted. I had no money to hire a substitute, so I made up my mind that I must leave my poor, sickly wife and little children, and go out and fight the enemy. After I had got all ready to go a young man whom I knew came to me and said: 'You have a big family which your wife cannot take care of. I will go for you.' He did go in my place, and in the battle of Chickamauga he was wounded and taken to the Nashville hospital. But after a long sickness he died, and was buried here, and ever since I have wished to come to Nashville and see his grave; so I saved up all the spare money I could, and yesterday I came on, and to-day I found my dear friend's grave."

With tears of gratitude running down his cheeks, he took up the small board and pressed it down into the ground in the place of a tombstone. Under the soldier's name were written only these words: "He died for me."

After a little while he grew so keen that you could not touch him without cutting your fingers. F. D——."

General Garfield, a Radical leader of Ohio, has arrived at Washington with the information that the Radicals think they can elect their State tickets in Ohio, but fear that they will lose the Legislature. From a less Radical standpoint this may be interpreted as meaning that the Radicals have made up their minds to lose the Legislature, and are squealing about the State ticket.

In the official investigation into the cause of the boiler explosion on board the Staten Island ferry-boat Westfield, the examination of a Mr. Berryman, who was Inspector of Boilers in 1869, at which time he inspected the Westfield, revealed his incompetency. The proceedings also developed an entirely new theory of the cause of the accident. A Mr. Wiard, an expert, in the course of a lengthy examination, demonstrated that the cause of the fracture was the difference of the temperature of the water in the bottom and the top of the boiler.

Amongst other gifts with which Prince Arthur, of England, was endowed on his recent birthday, was the "freedom of the city of London,"—a privilege which may once have been of some value, but is not of much account now. Under the grant the Prince may, if he chooses, set up in any retail business in London. Under the charter of Henry I., he is exempt from the payment of certain toll—but no one has paid them for centuries. He will not be liable to impressment as a sailor—a danger long since done away with, even for the most plebeian; and will be allowed to hunt wild boar in the forests of Middlesex—but he will not find any there, for the whole county of Middlesex is dotted with country seats.

The President recently spent a day in Washington. On his return to Long Branch he found a cable dispatch from the Earl of Dalkeith awaiting his arrival. It tendered him the Earl's congratulations on the Scott centennial celebration. Gen. Grant replied:

"Owing to my absence from home, I did not receive your congratulations and expressions of friendship for the American people in time to send a reply to be read at the centennial celebration of that eminent scholar and historian whose birth you commemorate."

This would seem to confirm the report that the capital of the nation has been removed to Long Branch. Hereafter, when public men visit Washington on important business, they need not be astonished to learn that "the President is not at home."

Grant Orders It.

The Republican Convention of Louisiana, or rather the Custom House Convention held in New Orleans on the 10th instant, was under the special protection and patronage of the President of the Convention, and to bring the United States, as the following dispatch to the New York Tribune shows:

New Orleans, August 10.—In the Custom House Convention, yesterday, Marshal Packard stated that he had authority form President Grant to use the Custom House as a place of meeting for the United States troops there for its protection.

A government building, one erected for business purposes, was appropriated for a partisan convention, and United States troops were placed in the building guarded with cannon for the protection of the delegates in the interest of President Grant. How does it look for the President of a republican government to use custom house and [illegible] troops to protect his henchmen in carrying out their [illegible] schemes!

Democratic Victories.

The elections in Kentucky and St. Louis are most decided anti-Administration victories. The Administration party expected most decided gains in Kentucky, enough to claim what they termed the morning after the election, a moral victory, but the returns do not give them even that poor comfort. At the election for Congressmen last year, when the negroes voted for the first time, the Democratic majority was 32,214, so that the Radicals had to reduce this majority to claim any gain to secure their so-called moral triumph. Up to Thursday evening official returns had been received in Louisville from thirty-nine counties, and the Ledger draws from them the following significant facts:

First, that these thirty-nine counties gives Leslie a majority larger by 4,461 than they give the Democratic candidates for Congress in 1870, when the negroes first voted at a general election in this State. As the aggregate Democratic majority at that election was 32,214, it is safe to assume that the same ratio of gain in the counties to be heard from will raise Leslie's majority above 40,000.

Secondly, That in there thirty-nine counties the Democratic candidates for Congress received but 37,705 votes, while Leslie's aggregate vote in the same counties is 55,384, a gain of 17,679 votes.

Is not this a great triumph? The Radicals went into the contest well organized, and with everything to give them encouragement that they would run down the Democratic majority to a compartively small figure, and some even confidently looked for the election of Harlan over Leslie. The Radical candidates made a most vigorous canvass, and Harlan had the advantage of a finer personal presence and superior ability as a stump orator over his competitor. Every appliance and all the aid and comfort that the National Administration could furnish was thrown into the Radical scale, but all proved unavailing. The result shows that the Democrats have not only increased the majority given a year ago, but that the Democratic candidate for Governor has received the largest vote ever polled in Kentuckey for the candidate of any party, and this, too, at an election where there was no unusual, even if there was the ordinary excitement of a contested election, and when the organization of the Democratic party was inefficient and no special effort was made to bring out a full vote.—State Sentinel.

A Little matter Overlooked.

In their theatrical hullabuloo over the alleged frauds in the finances of New York city the Radical editors never find time even mention the far greater and more serious frauds and robberies committed by the carpet-bag government of the Southern States.

Yet these sweeping peculations ought to be attended to. If the alleged extravagances in New York were multiplied by ninety, the product would not equal the sum of the astonishing robberies suffered by the afflicted taxpayers of the South.

Take, for illustration, the State of Georgia. The debt of that State has been run up to over $50,000,000, and only $5,000,000 of this is said to be legal. The State Treasurer, in his recent testimony before the Ku Klux Committee, assert that his signature to many millions of Georgia State bonds is a forgery. Here is downright Radical robbery of forty-five millions.

Florida has been treated still worse. There the robbery has gone on openly. Reed the carpet-bag Governor, has grown very rich in his plundering rule; and so have a score of his Radical friends. He is openly charged with procuring forged statutes—pretended laws that was never heard of in the Legislature—to further his plundering schemes. His conduct in harboring and shielding fugitive Radical officials who have fled plunder-laden, from [illegible]

State can not and will not pay the debt that these plunderers have fastened upon it.

Take Texas for another specimen. The taxes collected in Texas for the support of the State Government in 1860 are given at $454,804. In 1867, under the Andy Johnson restoration of civil government there were $244,208. For this year (1871) the assessments are $5,837,958. In 1860 the tax rate was 12½ cents per $100; in 1867 it was 15 cents, and now it is $2,25. This exhibit moves a paper published in the region afflicted to observe: The patience of the Southern people is a marvel in the history of oppression."

In Tennessee the Radical robberies foot up thirty millions. The newspapers there call attention to the case, and threaten repudiation.

In South Carolina the oppression and robbery has reached a point which practically amounts to almost the confiscation of the whole State.

This is only a specimen of the stupendous Radical robberies in one of the departments where the great congressional and carpetbagger rings have had control. It does not touch the gigantic swindles in railroad land grants, the immense whisky frauds, the wall street gold jobbing of Grant, Corbin & Co., or the thieving operations carried in Louisiana, Mississippi, and other southern States, on the grand San Domingo job, which is still engineered, contrary to law, by Grant himself!

From ten to forty-five millions of dollars stolen from each of the Southern States within five years of time, aside from the robbery of hundreds of millions through railroad land grants and other enormous jobs carried on upon a national scale, gives some idea of the capacity and ingenuity of the Radical thieving rings!

But no Radical journal has ever heard of this! These editors can not find time to look after such small deer. Their attention is taken up with New York City!

The Next Great War.

Are war clouds again gathering in the East? The note of warning is sounded in the Edinburg Review. "A [illegible] between Russia and Austria; it is inevitable sooner or later; it can not be averted." So alarming a prediction will certainly divert attention from France and Germany to the movement of those two Eastern powers. Both have been actively engaged in the reorganization of their armies; and though Russia has had the advantage of time, the declaration made by the Austrian War Minister this week as to the collossal army which under the new military system, he could place in the field, was not without significance and purpose. Austria, however, clearly meditates no aggression, not even upon her late assailants, Germany and Italy, still less on Russia. Whence then the danger? "Russia makes no secret of her desire to encroach on her neighbor and expand her influence abroad by force of arms, to make use of a propaganda for this purpose founded on a theory of race, to array the Sclave against the Magyar and the Austrian" Russia, according to the same authority has resolved upon a campaign wholly different from that which culminated in the Crimean disaster. The opening of the Black Sea to her fleet is a faint, or at most a stragetic operation, to divert attention from the grand fortified quadrilateral in Poland, whence, on the completion of the Russian scheme of military reorganization, Russian generals are "to advance on Central Europe, without risk to the internal peace to the country," thus bringing into practical realization the assertion that "the Eastern question can alone be solved at Vienna in a Russian sense." Are Russian intentions here belied? Too many facts combine in support of these conclusions to remove all distrust. The Porte, for the moment, is in favor at St. Petersburg, because Turkey is not the first to be assailed, and the Turco-Austrian alliance—alliances being the great dread Czar—might interpose an impassable barrier to the Russian advance. Germany is soothed by the presence of the Czar at Ems. England is ignored. Yet Russian generals are unostentatiously maneuvering their 650,000 men on the western border, whilst Russian statesmen are exerting their utmost to avert a combination of powers against their designs, and to extinguish in the Western States the embers of an Eastern policy, which was doomed by the crowning humiliation of the Black Sea Conference.

Hendricks Interviewed.

A correspondent of the New York Herald recently "interviewed" Hon. Thos. A. Hendricks on the political situation. We subjoin the most important part of the conversation. In answer to the inquiry as to what he thought of Mr. Vallandigham's "new departure" resolutions, Mr. Hendrick's said:

"I haven't thought much about them yet—I haven't had time. I think, though, they will be very generally accepted by the Democracy. We have had no occasion in this state to discuss politics this year, as we do not have an election this fall"

"The question will come up next fall, at the Presidential election I suppose?"

"Yes. We must make fight upon living issues. It is folly to be always going back to dead issues. We must take things as we find them. I think the great mass of the Democratic party realize this fact."

"I presume your are still a candidate for the Presidency? at least your friends so regard you?"

"Well it just this way. If the Democratic convention should see proper to be so partial as to nominate me, I will stand whether defeated or elected. But I don't know what the feeling may be in the convention. I shall make no great effort to get it. I don't intend that my friends shall resort to any underhand means to obtain it for me. They shall not with my consent at least. In some respects the Presidency is not desirable now. It is almost impossible, I presume, for a man to be four years in the White House without making a great many enemies, and rendering himself unpopular. This arises from the great increase of the patronage during the war, and growing out of it. It must really must be a great burden, as [illegible] ern Democrats don't subscribe to the new departure resolutions."

"That will come right in time. It is hardly to be expected that a new movement like this should meet with universal approval all at once. Mr. Vallandigham, I presume, expected opposition, and had he lived he would have been prepared to encounter it. Our friends will see the wisdom of this movement by and by, in time, I hope for the Presidential campaign."

"What the Democracy wants to do is to convince the people that they are not, as a party, revolutionary. You know this is charged upon them by the Republicans."

"I know that has been the groundwork of nearly all the Republican speeches in and out of Congress. Of course they don't believe themselves that if the Democracy came into power there would be any upsetting of things, any disregard of the Constitution and the laws, but they try to frighten the people with the picture. I think that four years of a Democratic administration would restore harmony between different sections of the country increase our prosperity, and place the republic in a position that she never occupied before."

What It Costs.

Telegraphs from Washington city state that the expenses of the Government for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, have just been summed up. The amount was six hundred and ninety-one millions.

This information comes through Republican sources and must be accepted as correct—at least the amount is not overstated. The total expenditure under the last year of Buchanan's Administration were eighty-five millions and the average expenses during his four years were about eighty millions. The expenditures under Grant's administration, and the Republican press commend it as being very economical, are eight fold more than they were under Buchanan. Such is the economy of Radical rule. No wonder the taxes are eating up the substance of the people.—State Sentinel.

[illegible]

[From the Savannah News, July 2[illegible].]

The most awful and appalling tragedy that has stirred the hearts of any community in this section, if ever before, occurred in Effingham county, about two miles above Station No. 3, on the Central Railroad, about 3 o'clock yesterday morning.

Mrs. Ash, wife John H. Ash, formerly of this city, killed her three little children and afterward committed suicide by taking a sufficient quantity of strychine to produce almost instantaneous death.

It appears from what we could learn from a gentleman who was an eyewitness to the horrifying scene, that Mrs. Ash, formerly Miss Laura Dasher, of Effingham county, has been for a short time past slightly deranged; at least she was suspected of being in this condition from certain singular appearances noticeable to those nearest her and in the most continuous association with her. However nothing serious was apprehended, except that her husband felt a little anxious about her, and communicated with her brothers on the subject. This was all. No more serious apprehension was felt, although her husband continued to keep a strict watch over her conduct. A short time previous he had purchased a small bottle of strychnine for the purpose of distroying the rats and dogs that were rapidly killing off their poultry. This he secreted is in the night time, taking the precaution to lock it up in an old bureau drawer, hiding the key in a place least likely to be discovered by his wife, no other person in the house knowing of the hiding place.

Sunday night all went to bed as usual, though before retiring Mrs. Ash sat down and wrote a long letter, to whom we could not ascertain; her husband read the letter, but did not suspect anything, although it contained an account of her feelings toward certain members of her family, with whom there was some unpleasantness. Mrs. Ash took all three of the children into bed with himself and his wife. Mr. George Patterson, a friend and relative of Mrs. Ash's, occupied and adjoining room.

About three o'clock yesterday morning, he and Mr. Ash were aroused by the cries of two of the children, and entering the room found Mrs. Ash in the act of taking a spoon from the mouth of the oldest child, a little girl, who had struggled and resisted until her cries woke her father and his friend, both of whom, feeling alarmed, asked her what she was doing. She replied, "only giving the children a little powder, and I am afraid I have not given them enough." They begged and entreated her to tell them what she had given them. Mr. Ash, tasting the powder which he had discovered on the mouth of one of the children found that it was quite bitter. She finally took him to the bureau drawer and showed him the bottle of strychnine from which she had dosed herself first, and then each one of her three little ones. It was but a short time after this before the mother, a young woman about twenty-five years old, and her three interesting little children—two girls and one boy—were lying stiff and cold in the arms of death. Dying in rapid succession, one after the other, the mother—although the first to take the poison—lived to see her children all die, and then followed them herself. It is said that the struggles of the creatures were awful, the oldest, falling backward, was drawn together in such a manner that her head and feet nearly touched each other. The afflicted father held his little ones and his wife in his arms until they breathed their last.

The time was too short from the discovery of the deed to procure any aid, although a physician was immediately sent for. He arrived in the time to save the father, who, in his efforts to discover what the drug was, had swallowed enough to render his condition dangerous. Mr. Patterson came to this city yesterday afternoon to pro[illegible]

All Hail the Sovereign State of Kentucky!

[illegible] in the history of the [illegible] people ever [illegible] military [illegible] by the Federal Government under President Grant. We call special attention to the following dispatch to the daily papers:

Lexington, Ky., August 7, 1871.

The election passed off quietly until a negro in a crowd of at least 1,800 in the Court house Square discharged a pistol, when a general panic ensued, and the crowd consisting almost altogether of negroes, broke in all directions, and that part of the crowd which rushed into an upper street drew their pistols and commenced firing upon all white persons. A general firing ensued in which about one hundred shots were fired indiscriminately. Two negroes were mortally wounded at a distance from the place where the shooting occurred and several persons were wounded. The exact extent of the casualties can not now be learned. The Court house bell had rung as a signal for the State Guard to assemble, which they did in five minutes, forming in Cheapside in a few moments. The United States troops stationed here also marched into Cheapside, and the officer commanding was asked by General Hendricks of the State Guard his purpose; he replied that it was to disperse the crowd, and was informed that the State Guard were assembled under orders and were not to be dispersed. Both forces then proceeded to load and stood confronting each other and a collision of State and Federal troops seemed imminent when the United States troops countermarched and retired.

Not content with attempting the control of elections in New York City, with several gun boats and seven thousand armed soldiers, and being defeated last November; not content with defeat in North Carolina, although his soldiers with bayonets in their hands surrounded the polls from morning till night; not content with overwhelming defeat in Missouri after sending there several regiments to teach the people how to vote; not content with all these checks on his efforts at crushing out the freedom of election, President Grant last Monday had his soldiers around the polls at Lexington and other places in Kentucky, who were forced by the State militia to "countermarch and retire from the field."

Thank high Heaven for the bravery of the free, sovereign, and independent State of Kentucky! Let each State preserve its freedom and integrity by imitating her glorious example. Send the watch words of Liberty from Maine to California, and from the Lakes to the Gulf—the sacred right of Election shall be preserved to the people, uninfluenced and uncontrolled by military power at every hazard.—Bucyrus Forum.

Promotion of an Alledged Murderer.

Lieutenant-Commander John Crittenden Watson has been promoted to the command of the Idaho on the East India station. Last year, when this man was executive officer of the Alaska, he had a sweat-box made, five feet high, four feet long, and two feet wide. This sweat-box was placed right over the ship's cooking stoves, where the temperature was not far short of 100 degrees. In the front of his sweat-box a number of holes were bored with a three-quarter-inch auger. The auger, however, had not been driven through the plank, that the holes in reality were only about the sixth of an inch in diameter.

Into this sweat-box Edward Williams a stalwart colored seaman, was thrust for quarrelling with one of the crew. Edwards was locked in, and Lieutenant-Commander John Crittenden Watson held the key.

Next day groans were heard issuing from the sweat-box. After some delay the key was procured by the master-at-arms, and the door was opened. Thereupon Edward Williams fell forth upon the deck, foaming at the mouth. Within one hour he was a corpse. A thermometer was placed in the sweat-box, and the mercury denoted 126 degrees.

Lieutenant-Commander Chittenden Watson was ordered home soon after The Sun first exposed this crime. Influence, however, has been at work, and instead of being handed over to justice to be tried as a manslayer, he has been promoted to the command of a United States war vessel.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All persons should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to one house in Fort Wayne this fall. Most goods and lowest prices.

Aug. 3,

BURLINGTON.

Leaving the East and arriving at Chicago or Indianapolis, how shall we reach the West? The best line is acknowledged to be the C., B. & Q., joined together with the Iron Bridge at Burlington, and called the Burlington Route.

The main line of the route running to Omaha, connects with the great Pacific Roads, and forms to-day the leading route to California. The Middle Branch, entering Nebraska at Plattsmouth, passes through Lincoln, the State Capitol, and will this year be finished to Fort Kearney, forming the shortest route across the Continent by over 100 miles.

Another branch of the B. M., diverging at Red Oak, falls into a line running down the Missouri through St. Joe to Kansas City, and all Kansas. Passengers by this route to Kansas, see Illinois, Southern Iowa, and Missouri, and, by slight divergence, can see Nebraska also.

Lovers of fine views should remember the Burlington Route, for its trains "high-[illegible]" from [illegible] crowned [illegible] rough bluffs and quarries—the [illegible] stretching over the prairies farther than eye can reach.

Land-buyers will be sure to remember it, for they have friends among the two thousand who have already bought farms from Geo. S. Harris, the Land Commissioner of the B. & M. R. R. at Burlington, Iowa, [illegible]

From all parts of the country, reports are most favorable for a good corn crop, and it is generally conceded that, notwithstanding the ravages of the Colorado bug, the potato crop will be fully up to the average.

Court.—The Circuit Court did not adjourn as soon as was expected. Judge Dowdy having another appointment, resigned the bench last Saturday, in favor of Attorney Ross, of Butler, who fills the position with the usual ability and dignity.

Photographs.—Our clever artist, G. W. Gordon, Esq., is taking very fine pictures, at his popular gallery on Main-st., and is receiving quite a large run of business.—Those who want an excellikeness of themselves should call at his establishment and he will guarantee you all satisfaction.

J. L. Davis, our popular hardware merchant has [illegible] us with a self-mouse trap which sets itself, and will catch itself full of mice, providing there is mice enough around. The first night we caught six, but the number has been reduced since, because the supply is about exhausted. It is the best mouse trap extant.

Mr. George T. Ager, our county surveyor, in wading through the swamps of Union township, found 100 acres of excellent land that had never "been entered." The government price was two hundred dollars, and Mr. Ager and Col. Johnson fastened on to it at once, thereby making about nine hundred dollars apiece, the land now being worth about two thousand dollars.—Goshen Democrat.

Enlarged.—We have received a number of the Defiance Democrat, recently enlarged and improved with a new dress, to an eight column paper. We congratulate our friend, Judge Green, its able and accomplished editor, on this evidence of prosperity, and trust that the fruits of his liberality and energy will be a largely increased business and an numerous addition to the Democratic party in that county.

A stranger brought the news of the accident to the parents last Sunday. He also stated that he dived for the body and brought it out. This is a mistake. Mr. Thomas Sprott, of this place, himself injured by the accident, rushed to the rescue of his friend, and brought him to the surface. It was a noble act and he alone should receive the praise. We learn that Will is at the hospital, gradually improving.

We received a poetical contribution last week, which we of published if the author had furnished us real name. We cannot break over the rule we have made in this particular. The name of the author must accompany each contribution, for our own personal information at least, if it does not go before the public. If the writer in this instance will give his or her name we will publish the poetry.

Immense Attraction.—Mons. Price, the sensational gymnastic, will give a free exhibition, at Auburn, on Monday Aug., 21st, by walking a tight wire extended across the principal street, from the top of the highest buildings. His performances are varied by a series of acrobatic feats which never fails to elicit the admiration and wonder of all beholders, forming the finest display of human intrepidity conceivable. Performance to commence at 3 o'clock p. m., regardless of weather.

F. H. Smythe, Ag't.

State Sentinel.—This excellent paper is certainly the most available one our citizens can get hold of, containing as it does, not only all the general news to be found in other papers, but also valuable information concerning our great and prosperous State. Intelligence from every county is given in an interesting form a feature not found in hose eastern papers, so generally received by our citizens. Get up a club for the State Sentinel, and we will guarantee that you will find it more interesting than any other you can subscribe tor.

Cheese Manufactory.—I am now manufacturing cheese for the trade, and have on hand a large lot, which I warrant good, not made of skimmed milk. My cows are fed on tame grass, clover and timothy and fresh pure water—no stagnant swamp water on the farm. I use Roe's patent premium cheese vat with improved heater, the best in the world, also Roe's improved ever and weight cheese press, patent expansion hoops, &c. I am now selling at 1 and 14 cents per pound. Dairy one-fourth mile south of Auburn, on the Fort Wayne road.

A Shrewd Merchant.—A wholesale grocer in this city who became rich in his business, says his rule always was, when he sold a bill of goods on credit, to immediately subscribe for the local paper of his debtor. So long as his customers advertised liberally and vigorously he rested but as soon as they began to contract his advertising space he took the fact as evidence that there was trouble ahead, and he invariably went for his debt. Said he "the man that feels too poor to make his business known, is too poor to do business." The withdrawing of an advertisement is an evidence of weakness that business men are not slow to observe and act upon.—N. Y. Times.

A Sad Case.—The Fort Wayne papers gave an account some time ago of a young lady who called at a drug store for a dose of castor oil, inquiring at the same time how it could be taken so that it might not be tasted. The clerk promised to explain to her, and in the meantime proposed to drink a glass of soda with her. When she had finished he said you have taken your oil and did not know it." The young lady was nearly crazy, and cried, "Oh dear! I didn't want the oil for myself—it was for my mother."

Well, now, this would have been all well enough, had the affair stopped here. But the next day the Chicago papers stated that the young lady had taken the first train to that city and repeated the dose. And the next day and so on for a month [illegible] appeared at St. Louis, Memphis, Cincinnati, Louisville, New Orleans and other cities, according to the papers, and you know they never lie, taking her usual dose of the gentle cathartic, at every place where a newspaper was published. The B. & O. Extension.

We copy the following article from the Pittsburgh Post, from which it will be seen that the work of organization of this great thoroughfare has really commenced. We learn further, that the organization in Ohio and Indiana will be perfected as soon as the survey of rival routes now being made shall be sent into headquarters and their respective merits canvassed.

Our readers will remember the prediction made in President Garrett's speech made at the big banquet, that they intend to build another railroad from Pittsburgh to the lakes, and that the B & O. R. R. would subscribe $5,000,000 to the new project. On Saturday, at a meeting in this city, the organization of the new railroad was effected. The road will be known as the "Baltimore Pittsburgh & Chicago Railroad." The new line proposed is to be the western extension of the Pittsburgh & Connelsville Railroad, and to its importance can hardly be over estimated. That the organizers of the enterprise are in earnest and 'mean business' is shown by the fact that Mr. Wm. O. Hughart has been chosen President of the new company. The history of the Connellsville Railroad under his Presidency, is a sufficient guarantee of the thorough, able and conscientious manner in which the affairs of the new road will be conducted. The enterprise, we understand, will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

The share capital for the construction is provided in the proportion of $2,000,000 by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company $3,000,000 through local subscriptions along the route. Further funds for the completion of the road will be raised through mortgage bonds. The new line will be a positive rival for Chicago business with the two lines controled by the Pennsylvania company from Pittsburgh to Chicago, the one via Fort Wayne 468 miles, and the other via Columbia 507 miles.

At present the new line would invite traffic chiefly to Baltimore. But, in reference to New York, it will not be overlooked that in the event, not regarded doubtful, of the acquisition by the new Jersey United Companies' roads an active and ambitious railroad interest, already well organized and strong, will be left to compete with the Pennsylvania company for business from Pittsburgh to Baltimore.

The Huntington Democrat says Col. I. B. McDonald, the people's favorite for Lieutenant Governor is a farmer, and the following extract from his home paper, the Columbia City Post, shows that he is a progressive and a successful one:

"Col I. B. McDonald has demonstrated by a system of complete tile under drainage on a swamp west of town, that the worst of our swamps can be made the most valuable and productive of our lands It would be economy if our farmers would pay more attention to the drainage on their lands, and let their valuable timber stand."

It is by no means certain that the cholera is to visit us this year or the next.—The fact that it is now to some degree prevalent in Russia is not conclusive on the subject. It has been there for two years, and during the last year over two thousand persons have died of it in St. Petersburg alone. But there are reasons why it may linger in Russia a long while without crossing the frontier. In fact, it seems to like Russia, and in Muscovitish mortality we may find our escape from the ravages of the pestilence. But the necessity of preparing for its approach is in no respect lessened. Let us have clean streets and houses, whether it comes or not; and if it does come, we shall see it robbed o more than half its terrors.

Accident.—On Saturday afternoon, at about two o'clock, William Little, an employe of McKay & Goshorn, was very seriously injured while at work on the new bridge across the St. Joe, near Rudisill's mill. One of the braces slipped and Little and another man were knocked down the former falling into the river. His companions rescued him just in time to save him from drowning. He was taken to the hospital and cared for by Dr. Myer. He had received a very severe cut, extending nearly three inches obliquely over the eye. The back of his head and back were also very much hurt. Little has been suffering greatly, but was much more comfortable yesterday. He lives in Auburn, DeKalb County.—Ft. Wayne Gazette.

Stopping a Newspaper.—One of our exchanges has the following allegory, which we commend to the careful consideration of those gentlemen who, the moment they see anything that displeases them in the columns of their local journal, rush to the printing office and cry "Stop my paper!"

"A certain man hit his toe against a pebble and fell headlong to the ground.—He was vexed, and under the influence of anger and self-sufficiency, kicked the earth right soundly. With imperturbable gravity he looked to see the earth itself dissolved and come to naught. But the earth remained, and only his poor foot was injured by the encounter. This is the way of a man. An article in a newspaper touches him in a weak spot, and forthwith he sends to stop his paper. With great complacency he looks to see the crash, when he finds he only hit his toe against a world that does not perceptibly feel the shock and injures no one but himself."

Home First.—Every capitalist of a town ought to use his means in stimulating some wealth producing industry. The man who invests his money in an establishment that makes plows, threshers, reapers, mowers, woolen goods, &c., is a local public benefactor. There is no mistake about him. All such enterprises naturally stimulate the growth and add to the wealth of the communities in which they are established. Every dollar kept at home has its advantages, more or less, for every citizen. The most wealthy and prosperous cities and towns in the world are those that work upon the co-operative plan—that aim to build up their own merchants, manufactures, mechanics, laborers, etc. Every cent diverted from home is so much taken from home consumers, and lessens to a greater or less extent the ability of home men to meet their liabilities.

During a fine straight evening lately a three year old philosopher, after a silent and apparently profound scrutiny of the heavens, asked his mother abruptly, where the stars came from. Mamma replied: "I don't know, Willie; I don't know [illegible]

Mistake.—Our attention has been called to an erroneous statement made by the Waterloo Press, relative to the weight and price of wheat. The facts as we learn since the statement alluded to appeared, are to this effect: Mr. Culburtson delivered a load of wheat at this place, and contracted for the remainder of his crop, at the price then offered. The grain in this load was shrunken and dirty and did not hold out in weight. The second load was taken to Waterloo, a slight advance, having taken place since the contract was made. This was nice plump grain, and over ran in weight. The third load was delivered in this place according to agreement which weighed more than the second load. This Mr. C. acknowledged at the time and was fully satisfied with the result. We make this statement, in justice to the parties concerned and to correct any impression that our weights and prices are not under those of our neighboring towns. A fair statement should injure no one.

The women keep inventing new things to sue men for to obtain money. Not long since all the suing was for breach of promise, and such tricks, but now a Chicago girl has commenced a suit against a gentleman for "assumpsit," claiming $10,000. This crime cannot be very common or we should have heard more about it.—In the meantime it would be well enough [illegible]

An Escape From Justice.

I looked at my watch; it was barely half-past eleven, and I knew we were not due at Exmouth until after twelve. I rubbed the frost from the pane and looked out.

We had stopped at a little way station in the midst of a dense pine wood.

"Is this Exmouth?"

It was the soft voice of a pretty traveler opposite.

"No—I don't know what place it is; some way station."

"Does this train stop at way stations?"

"Not generally; they must have been specially signalled here."

"It is cold," she said, in a scarcely audible voice, drawing her shawl around her. "Oh, I wish they would hurry on!"

"We are moving once more," I said. "Conductor,"—for the man of tickets was passing through the car—"why did we stop at that backwoods place?"

"Out of water," was the reply as he hurriedly passed by.

Now I know perfectly well that this answer was not the true solution of the matter. Our delay did not exceed half a minute, altogether too short a time for replenishing the boilers.

Five minutes later the conductor re-entered the car. I made room for him at my side.

"Sit down, conductor; you've nothing to do this minute."

He obeyed.

"What did you mean by telling me such a lie just now?"

I spoke under my breath; he replied in the same tone:

"To tell the truth I stopped to take on a single passenger—a gentleman who has come down from Bayswater."

"For the pleasure of traveling once more over the same route?"

"Exactly so—for the purpose of ravelling certain society. Don't be alarmed for your own safety; it's a detective policeman"

I was about to repeat the words in astonishment, when he motioned me in silence.

"Where is he?"

"The detective? He sits by the door yonder, with a ragged fur cap pulled over his eyes. Did you ever see a more perfect specimen of the dilapidated countryman?"

I smiled; I could hardly help it.

"What is the cause?"

"A murder—a man his wife, and two little children—their throats cut, last night, and the house set on fire afterwards."

We had continued the conversation throughout in a whisper, scarcely above our breath, and now the conductor rose and left me to study the faces of my fellow passengers, with curious dread and horror.

I felt convinced that a man opposite with a heavy hanging jaw, was the Cain. As I looked furtively across I caught the wide open blue orbs of the pretty little traveler.

Obeying the instantaneous impulse of my heart, I arose and went over to her.

"You heard what we were saying?"

"Yes—a murder—oh how horrible?"

"Do not be frightened no one shall hurt you."

She smiled up in my face with sweet, confiding innocence.

Our stay in Exmouth was but brief; but during the delay I could see that the watchful detective had changed his seat for one nearer the fiendish man with the hanging jaw.

"See," faltered the young girl, "they locked car doors at Exmouth; they are unlocking them now."

"Probably they were fearful that the criminal might escape," I remarked in an undertone.

"Will you—may I trouble you to bring me a glass of water."

I rose and made my way toward the ice cooler by the door. To my disappointment the tin goblet was chained to the shelf.

"No matter," said she, with a winning smile; I will come myself."

I drew the water, and held up the cup; but instead of taking it as she approached, she brushed suddenly past me, opened the door and rushed out upon the platform.

"Stop her! stop her!" shouted the detective, springing to his feet; "she will be killed—conductor—brakeman, hold up!"

There was a rush, a tumult, a bustle. I was the first upon the platform, but it was empty and deserted save by a half frozen looking brakesman.

"She went past me like a shadow, and jumped off as we crossed the Cairn turnpike road." He stammered.

Jumped off an express train! Well" said the conductor shrugging his shoulders, "she must have been killed instantly."

"It's five hundred dollars out of my pocket," said the detective ruefully. "I was a confounded fool!"

"What!" I ejaculated, "you surely do not mean that child—"

"I mean," said the detective calmly, "that child as you call her, is Attila Burton, a maried woman of twenty-six year of age, who last night murdered four persons in cold blood, and was trying to escape to Canada."

The train stopped and a party of us headed by the conductor and detective, went back to search for any trace of the young creature. Nor was it long before we found her, lying quite dead by the side of he track, frightfully mangled by the force of the fall, and mutilated almost beyond recognition.

"Well, she's escaped justice in this world if not in the next," said the detective gloomily.

"Do you suppose she expected to be able to jump off the train without injury?" I asked.

"Without much injury; women are such unreasoning creatures. But I never dreamed of such insane folly, or I should have taken prompt measures to prevent it."

They lifted up the dead, fair thing, and carried it to the nearest place of refuge—a lonely farm house among the hills, and we returned to the train, reaching Bayswater only a few minutes behind the regular time.

And when in the next morning's papers, I read an account of the murders, I thought of the slender creature [illegible]

Last Wednesday evening a young woman named Elizabeth Padouner, in the employ of Simon Loeb, of Attica, went out to milk the cow. Not returning in reasonable time, search was instituted, and it was found that both the woman and cow were gone. All search for the woman proved unavailing. Next morning Joseph Rogers accidentally discovered her dead body in the canal back of his soap factory about eight o'clock. She was lying face down in two feet of water. She had a terrible bruise and cut on the right eye and across the nose—the eye apparently gone and the brains oozing out.

A few nights since, at a late hour, the speaking-tube at the office door of one of New Haven's popular physicians was used by some midnight wag, to the following effect: The doctor was in a sound sleep, when he was partially awakened by a "halloo" through the tube, when the following dialogue took place: "Does Dr Jones live here?" "Yes, what do you want?" "Are you Dr. Jones?" "Yes." "Dr. Simon Jones?" "Yes—yes! what do you want?" "Why, how long have you lived here?" "Some twenty years; why?" "Why? why don't you move?" Enjoying a Cigar.

Mr. Charles Bullen, in his Story of Count Bismarck's Life, tells this anecdote of the great premier:

"The value of a good cigar," said Bismarck, as he proceeded to light an excellent Havana, "is best appreciated when it is the last you possess, and there is no chance of getting another. At Konigegratz I had only one cigar left in my pocket, which I had carefully guarded through the whole of the battle, as the miser does his treasure. I did not feel justified in using it. I painted in glowing colors in my mind the happy hour when I should enjoy it after the victory. But I had miscalculated my chances." "And what was the cause of your miscalculation?"

"A poor dragoon. He lay helpless, with both arms crushed, murmuring for something to refresh him. I felt in my pockets and found only gold, and that would be of no use to him. But stay—I still had my treasured cigar! I lighted this for him, and placed it between his teeth. You should have seen the poor fellow's grateful smile! I never enjoyed a cigar so much as that one which I did not smoke."

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO. of Bridgeport, Conn. adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonably be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk. Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Braiding, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segher, would state that we are well pleased with its working of the machine in every respect.

MY SUMMER DAY.

[illegible]
Kissing the crimson clover,
And sunshine haunting the lily bays
That the yellow bees hung over.
And the sunshine over the hazy hills,
And over the rippling river—
And I wished that the sun and the Summer day
Might shine and last forever.

We walked down by the meadow path,
The broad highway forsaking,
For the quiet of that lovely spot
Seemed better for our lovemaking;
And I was silent and she was shy,
And we walked down through the clover;
But we thought it the sweetest summer day
That ever the sun shone over.

We heard the birds in the waving grass
As they twittered to each other
About the nests they had hidden away—
And the coo of each birds mother.
And we thought, as we walked that summer day
Through the clover blooms together,
That at last the world was in perfect tune,
In the glad bright summer weather.

I cannot tell what I said to her,
As we walked knee deep in clover;
But I know that [illegible]
Their sweetest of sweet songs over,
And down in my heart love's own bird song
[illegible]
And its echo joined with the world's sweet hymn
And made the day completer.

And when we came [illegible]
Our hearts sang [illegible]
O sweet, glad day [illegible]
And for every blithe young lover!"
And yet I know not the words she said,
Or whether she spoke at all;
[illegible] sweet days [illegible] summer day
I count as the best of all.

Daddy's Boy.

In a certain small town on the Mississippi lived a man who [illegible] business. He bought up horses for a city market, and was considered pretty good on a trade.

One day, a long, lean, queer, green looking specimen of the western country arrived at dock with a boat load of horses. He inquired for the horse jockey.

'Daddy sent me down with some horses,' he [illegible] half idiotic [illegible]

'[illegible]'

'Daddy.'

'What do you want for your horse?'

'Daddy said you could set your price,' was the response.

'Let me go down and look at your horses,' said Brown, and accordingly they were soon at the boat.

Brown examined the horses, and named the price he would give for this one and that, and the country bumpkin made no objection, although some of the offers were not more than one half the real price of the animal. One of the bystanders gently suggested to the countryman that he [illegible] cheated, but he responded:

'Daddy, said Brown, would set the price himself,' and so Brown had it all his own [illegible]

At last they came to another animal which did not look much superior to the rest.

'[illegible]' said the fellow, 'Daddy says he can run some.'

'Run! [illegible] Brown, 'that nag can't run worth a cent.'

'Daddy said so, and daddy knows.'

'Why, I've got one up at the stable that [illegible]'

'Guess not,' said the fellow. 'Let's try 'em. I'll bet the whole boat load of horses on 'im.'

Brown smiled.

'I'll stake five thousand dollars against your boat load,' said Brown, winking to the crowd, and these men,' selecting two, shall hold the stakes.'

Brown's five thousand was intrusted to one, and the other went on board the horse boat.

One of the crowd started to remonstrate with the poor idiotic fellow, but he only responded:

'Golly! dad told me he could run some, and daddy ought to [illegible] if he was sich a tarnal fool as to [illegible] he couldn't.'

Brown's sleek racer was brought down, and [illegible] The countryman led out his animal and climbed on [illegible] to ride.

The word was given, and they started amidst the laughter of the crowd. At first Brown's [illegible] and it looked as though the poor fellow was to be badly beaten, when suddenly he plunged forward, and [illegible] jockey was left far behind. Such [illegible] had not been seen in those parts for a long time, and poor Brown was crestfallen, as the cheers of the bystanders fell on his ears.

'I'll take the spondulix,' said the country [illegible]

Brown tried to say it was a joke, but the fellow would have his money. [illegible] 'I guess I won't trade to-day,' he said as he put in his old, rough, leather pocket [illegible] 'I'll go back to daddy.'

In vain Brown tried to induce him to trade, but he pushed off his boat, resolutely saying, 'I'd better go back, and tell [illegible]'

Brown was completely sold, for he knew at once that the green countryman was a little shrewder than people imagined him, and had just come there purposely to win his money from him.

Next time he did not ridicule a horse that daddy said could run some.

A FAMILY WITHOUT A NEWSPAPER.—Nothing presents a sadder commentary, up on the present unhealthy condition of our once loved and prosperous country than the large number of families, both in the city and country, but more especially in the latter, who subscribe to no paper of any kind. Hundreds and thousands of families are thus growing up in utter ignorance of what is transpiring in the world around them—ignorant of the mighty events of to-day. But who can tell the vast amount of injury that is being inflicted upon the rising generation those who are to take our places in the busy world [illegible], growing up without any knowledge of the present, the past, or study any of the future, and this ignorance [illegible] into them by the sanction of those who should, and [illegible], know better, did they only think of their injurous effects of their insane course. Let the head of every family think of this, and place in the hands of those for whom he is responsible the means of acquiring [illegible] in which we enact our parts.

It requires about five hours for the stomach to [illegible] an ordinary meal [illegible] and pass it out of itself. [illegible] stage of repose. Hence, if a man eats three times a day, his stomach must work fifteen hours out of every twenty-four. After the night's sleep, we wake up with a certain amount of bodily vigor, which is [illegible] muscles [illegible] When the external body [illegible] after a long day's work, the stomach [illegible] but if when the body is [illegible] stomach meanwhile a [illegible] which must be performed, we impose upon the very best friend we have, the one that [illegible] enjoyment [illegible] certainly wear out prematurely as the body itself will, if it is overworked every day.

And if persons eat between meals, then the stomach has no rest from breakfast in the morning, until one, two, three, or four o'clock, next day; hence it is that so many persons have dyspepsia, the stomach is worked so much and so constantly, that it becomes too weak to work at all. It is to be hoped that all intelligent persons will press these things on the attention of their children [illegible] because dyspepsia, like consumption, has its foundation laid in a large majority of cases during the "teens" of life.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Buying and Selling.

The following is the way they buy and sell in Madrid, if a correspondent tells the truth:—

[illegible] by a sleepy merchant, nodding behind his [illegible] "What is this [illegible] worth?"

He answers with profound indifference, "Ten reals."

"Ten reals! Are you dreaming or crazy?" She drops the coveted [illegible] and moves on, apparently horror stricken.

The shopman calls her back peremptorily.

"Don't be rude! The scarf is worth twenty reals—but for the sake of Saint [illegible] Maria, I offered it to you for [illegible] What will you give?"

"Caramba! Am I buyer and seller as well? The thing is worth three reals; more is robbery."

"Jesu! Maria! Jose! and all the family! Go thou with God! We cannot trade. Sooner than sell for less than eight reals, I shall raise the [illegible] of my house! Go thou! It is eight in the morning, and still thou dreamest."

She lays down the scarf reluctantly, saying "Five!" But the outraged [illegible] snorts scornfully, Eight is my last word! Go to!"

She moves away, thinking how well that scarf would look in the Appollo Gardens, and cast over her shoulder a Parthian glance and bids 'Six!'

'Take it! It is madness—but I cannot waste any time bargaining.'

Both congratulate themselves on the operation. He would have given [illegible] How trade would suffer if we had windows in our breasts.

Jennie Jones was a very pretty little girl and it was the first time she had ever been a visiting by herself. She was spending the afternoon with one of her schoolmates, and when it came tea time, Jennie was invited to stop to tea.

"I guess you had better," said her little friend's mother, good hospitable Mrs. Morse; "set right up to the table along with Sairy—won't you now?"

Jennie fidgeted, twisted her apron, put her finger in her mouth and finger electrified the company by remarking:

'Overboard, you blockhead!'

The Irishman snatched up one of the pigs of lead and threw it overboard; the mate, in endeavoring to prevent him, lost his balance and fell into the river.

The captain running to the edge of the deck asked: "Why don't you heave the lead, and sing out how much water there is?"

'The lead is heaved, your honor,' said Pat, 'and the mate's gone down to see how much water there is.'

[illegible]

"Yes, but I tell you, [illegible] at the most interesting [illegible] world.

'You don't want a pretty [illegible] wife?"

'Not that pretty girl in particular, doctor.'

'Nor fifty thousand dollars?' added the doctor, pronouncing [illegible] words in a manner that made them sound very [illegible]

'I would not object to the fifty thousand dollars in itself, Sir; but as an appendage to Miss Bradbury [illegible]'

'I believe the boy [illegible]' ted Dr. Darling [illegible] Scotch proverb [illegible] mean [illegible] and I shall interfere no further. By the way, Harry [illegible]

'Yes, Sir.'

'You are going to the city this afternoon [illegible]

[illegible] leave Mrs. Darling's [illegible] be mended. [illegible] a week ago, but [illegible] everything."

"Certainly, [illegible]" Clifford deposited the pearl brooch, an old-fashioned ornament of massive gold set with tiny seed-pearls, in his waist-coat pocket.

[illegible] elry, young man," said Dr. Darling elevating his eyebrows.

"Oh, I never lose any thing," asserted Harry, in an offhand sort of way.

The morning sun was coming bright [illegible] flickering through the [illegible] Madeira vines, trained across the casement, stirred [illegible] July air; and Ursula Percy, Mrs. Darling's [illegible] was [illegible] blackberries.

Fresh as a rose, with hazel eyes, softened to intense blackness at times by the shadow of their long lashes, and smiling scarlet lips, she stood there, her calico dress concealed by the housewifely apron of white dimity that was tied round her waist, and her black curls tucked remorselessly back of her cameo-looking demurely into the bubbling depths of the preserving-kettle, like a beautiful parody on one of the witches in "Macbeth;" while on the whitely scoured pine table beyond a glittering tin vessel was upheaved with beautiful jet-black fruit, each separate berry flashing like the eye of an Oriental belle.

"Ursula!"

The pretty young girl started, very nearly dropping her skimmer into the preserving-kettle.

"How you startled me, Harry!"

Harry advanced into the kitchen, with an admiring look at the bright face, flushed with a little blush and a good deal of stove-heat.

"You are always at work, Ursula."

"I have got to work, Harry, to earn my own living," Ursula Percy answered, with a slight uplifting of her exquisite black brows. "I am not an heiress, like Miss Bradbury."

"Confound Miss Bradbury!" exclaimed our hero. "I hear nothing but Miss Bradbury the whole time."

"She is a very sweet young lady, Harry," said Ursula, in mildly reproving accents.

"I dare say, but—what a lot of blackberries you have here, to be sure, Ursula."

"Forty quarts," said Ursula, demurely. "Aunt Darling always enjoys them so much in the winter."

Harry put a honey-sweet globule of fruit into his mouth.

"Blackberries are a beautiful fruit, Ursula."

"Very," and Miss Percy skimmed diligently away at the bubbling caldron.

"Especially when you are doing them up," added the young [illegible] with rather a clumsy effort at compliment.

Ursula did not answer. Harry walked up to the range and took both her hands in his.

"Harry, don't! The berries will burn."

"Let 'em burn, then; who cares?"

"But what do you want?" she asked, struggling impotently to escape, and laughing in spite of the grave look she fain would have assumed.

"To see your eyes, Ursula."

She lifted the soft hazel orbs to his face, then withdrew them with sudden shyness.

"Do you know what answer I [illegible]" [illegible] after [illegible] ken only by the hissing and [illegible] of the boiling blackberries.

"No."

"[illegible] and with [illegible] Ah, Harry [illegible] Uncle and [illegible] by Miss Bradbury."

"And I am so determined not to marry her! Is a man to be given away like the [illegible] or a bundle of [illegible] know? Ursula."

"Harry, they are burning! I am sure of it. I can smell them. Oh, do let go my hands."

Harry Clifford [illegible] lifted up the long iron spoon, and stirred the boiling [illegible]

[illegible] with [illegible] Aunt Darling."

"But, Ursula [illegible]"

The creaking sound of an opening door [illegible] Ursula almost pushed Harry Clifford out of the kitchen.

"You'll be on the [illegible] tonight [illegible] then [illegible] to the [illegible] strength [illegible] the clock in the [illegible]

"Yes, yes, anything—everything—[illegible]"

And Harry went, begining to realize that love-making and preserving do not [illegible]

"Your pearl brooch, my dear? Oh, I remember now. I gave it to Harry more than a week ago to have mended. I dare say it's done by this time!" and Dr. Darling turned expectantly to our hero.

"I—I'm very sorry," began Harry, "but the brooch disappeared in the most unaccountable manner from my vest pocket—I know I put it there—"

"Yes," dryly interrupted the elder gentleman, "I remember seeing you put it there, and you assured me at the time that you never lost any thing. So the brooch is gone, eh?"

"Yes, Sir, it is gone. But Mrs. Darling may rest assured," Harry added, with a glance toward that lady, "that I will replace it at the very earliest opportunity."

"Oh, it is of no consequence at all!" said Mrs. Darling, with a countenance that said plainly, "It is of the very gravest consequence." "Perhaps we [illegible] it somewhere about the house."

But the days slipped by one by one, and the poem of the pearl brooch remained involved in the deepest mystery. Harry Clifford bought another [illegible] presented it to Mrs. Dr. Darling, which [illegible] brooch. Mrs. Darling laughed, and pinned it into the folds of the thread lace, [illegible] her throat.

"[illegible] still it's so strange what can have become of the other," said Mrs. Darling.

It was in the golden month of September that the old doctor and Mrs. Darling made up their minds to invite Miss Bradbury to tea.

"We'll have pound-cake and preserved blackberries," said Mrs. Darling, who always looked at the material side of things.

"And if Harry don't come to terms now, he never will," added her husband, who didn't.

"Get out the best china and the chased silver tea service, Ursula," said Mrs. Darling.

"And wear your pink French calico, child; it's the most becoming dress you have," said her uncle, with a loving glance at the bright little brunette.

And Ursula Percy obeyed both of their mandates.

Miss Bradbury came—a handsome, showy young lady, with a smooth "society" manner that made Ursula feel herself very countrified and common indeed.

"Delicious preserves these!" said Miss Bradbury.

"They are of Ursula's making," said Mrs. Darling. And Harry Clifford passed his plate for a second supply.

"I remember the day they were brewed, or baked, or whatever you call it," said he, with an arch glance at Ursula.

Suddenly old Dr. Darling grew purple in the face, and began to cough violently. Every one started up.

"He's swallowed the spoon!" cried Miss Bradbury.

"Oh, oh! he's got the appoplexy!" screamed Mrs. Darling, hysterically.

"Uncle! dearest uncle!" piped up poor little Ursula, vaguely catching at a glass of water.

But Dr. Darling recovered without any more disastrous symptoms.

"It isn't the spoon, and I don't come of an apoplectic family," said he. "But, upon my word, this is about the biggest blackberry I ever came perilously near swallowing!" And he held out his wife's pearl brooch, boiled up in the blackberries!

There was a momentary silence around the table, and then it was broken by Mrs. Darling—one of those blessed old ladies who never see an inch beyond their own spectacled noses.

"My goodness gracious!" said Mrs. Darling; "how could it ever have come into the preserved blackberries? I—don't—see—"

"But I do!" said Dr. Darling, looking provokingly knowing. "Yes, I see a good many things now that I didn't see before."

And Harry, glancing across the table at Ursula, was somewhat consoled to perceive that her cheek was a shade more scarlet, if that were possible, than his own.

He followed the old doctor into his office when the evening meal was concluded.—Ursula [illegible] is not for [illegible] Mrs. Darling's obtuseness, and Sophy Bradbury's supercilious [illegible] boldly into the matter.

"Doctor—" he began valiantly, but the old gentleman interrupted him.

"There's no need of any confession, boy," he said. "I know [illegible] you didn't want to marry Miss Bradbury. And I don't say that I blame you much, only I came very near choking to death with Ursula's blackberry jam!"

And Doctor Darling laughed again until, had his spouse [illegible] would surely have [illegible] attack of apoplexy among [illegible] blue.

"Little Ursula" [illegible]

The brooch was all [illegible] the gold of the old-fashioned brooch tarnished with the alchemy of cooking, but Ursula keeps that old brooch yet, more tenderly treasured than all the modern jewels with which her young husband loads her. And every year, when she puts up blackberries, Dr. Darling [illegible] and makes ponderous witticisms, and pretends to search in the [illegible] preserve dish for a "boiled brooch!"

But then jolly old gentlemen will have their jokes.

A Memphis man would never take a "dare," and when a belle challenged him to marry her, he made her his wife inside of twenty minutes, and in twenty [illegible] they were happily divorced.

A young woman in Connecticut recently, when sick, mortgaged her body to her physician for dissection in case of death, as compensation for professional attendance upon her. And then maliciously she got well.

The house in Auburn, Me., in which two old ladies were brutally murdered a few years ago, by a negro, rents with five acres of land, for $10 a year, and it is difficult to get a tenant at that low rate.

In Washington City, during a storm a young lady was struck by lightning and rendered speechless. Several physicians have called, but they have failed to relieve her to any extent. She writes that she suffers no pain whatever, but cannot speak a word.

During the year ending June 30th, 1871, the Post Office Department established 2,407 new offices, and discontinued 854 offices making a net increase in number of offices [illegible] the year of 1,553. On the 30th of June last there were, 30,045 offices in the United States.

Rev. Peter Cartwright is eighty-seven years of age, and has been an itinerant minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church for sixty-seven years. He now writes that he is too feeble to answer his letters, or to lecture, or dedicate churches during the hot weather.

Mr. Seward said at Constantinople, at an entertainment given by the Sultan, that he had "completed nearly two-thirds of a voyage around the globe and he had not as yet found a people who were not friends of the United States, and he had yet to find in the rest of his journey the people or government which is hostile, if there be one."

The Davenport, Iowa, printers [illegible] ed a circus and [illegible] menagerie the other day for not paying its bills, and now each editor is happy owner of a Boa-constrictor, or Glasticutus, or a Hippopotamus, or an Alaskan Sea Lion. When subscribers rage and a man comes in and wants to know "who wrote that article," the editor unlocks his menagerie, and the insulted fellow has a sudden call to "see a man" elsewhere.

HORRIBLE!—In New York a man recently made a wager that he could run a closed umbrella down his throat to the handle. No sooner had he accomplished this feat than the inhuman wretch with whom he made the bet seized the umbrella by the handle and opened it all the way, catching it on the catch. He then [illegible] Of course all efforts to close the [illegible] and remove it have been unavailing [illegible] and the poor sufferer walks about with his person distended in a manner that is inexpressively painful. These practical jokes are very wrong. Just for the sake of a momentary [illegible] this man is obliged to carry that umbrella with him to his grave.

Horatio Ward, an American who recently died in London, left a legacy to the grand-daughters of Robert Morris, of Revolutionary fame. In his will he says, "It will, doubtless surprise them to get a legacy from a person that they never knew and perhaps never heard of; therefore it is but proper that they should be informed that the bequest is made through compassion for their misfortunes, and in return for the kindnesses shown me by their father when I was a boy; and it may be as well that these Morris heirs should be informed that it was I who sent some money to her and her younger sister, under the name of their father's friend a few years ago."

Grant's Crime at New Orleans.

The following statements respecting the intervention of the military to secure for Grant the delegates of Louisiana in the approaching Republican National Convention are furnished in a Washington telegram to our contemporary the World:

"The more the recent political movement in Grant's reelection interest in Louisiana is developed, the more iniquitous does it become. There has been no end to prostitution of official patronage and power to observe his purposes, though they were to triumph over a majority of his own party. It turns out according to advices at hand here, that not only was the Custom House used to hold a political convention, and United States troops employed to keep out hostile delegates, but that the money-order office of the New Orleans Post Office was occupied by the Grant Radical State Committee, and the credentials of delegates handed out through the window of the office to delegates as they came by in line. A delegation of leading Republicans of the State will soon be on their way to Long Branch to demand the removal of Collector, United States Marshal, and Postmaster."

These facts are odious enough in themselves; but they are small consequence compared with the great and astounding facts that the troops of the United States were sent by Gen Reynolds, in compliance with a request emanating from President Grant's brother-in law to overawe and exclude Republicans who had a right to attend that convention. This is an unprecedented and damnable outrage; and the other circumstances connected with it, disgusting as they are, are of trifling moment in comparison. When soldiers of the army are employed with ball cartridge and fixed bayonets and an army of Gatling guns to stand at the door of a State Convention in order that no person shall be admitted who is not favorable to the aspirations of their commander-in-Chief, all collateral occurrences sink into insignificance.

Let the people understand the nature of this unprecedented crime, and deal with it and its authors as they deserve.

While the independent press and more intelligent Democratic journals unanimously express their admiration for the noble utterances of Senator Schurz in his speech at Chicago last Saturday evening, we are sorry to perceive that the Republican papers generally avoid it as if it was something that they could not touch with safety. And yet in this speech the Senator has declared nothing but the principles which must indisputably be applied in the administration of the Government, unless the Republic is to be overthrown by military usurpation.—New York Sun.

What Wells Says.

Hon. David Wells, late Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has studied workings and effect of the Radical administration thoroughly, and is perhaps the best posted statesman in the country, exhibits a dark picture as the result of the Radical management of the government. He says that the complaints of the working people, in spite of the nominally increased rates of wages, are general, and that the wages do not meet the cost of the necessaries of life. Ships are rotting at the wharves, important branches of manufactures are abandoned, and producers of staple articles complain that they earn no profits. Commerce is crippled, and, while exports diminish, imports increase in proportion. The people are now using less tea, coffee and sugar, and fewer, shoes and boots than before the war. Mr. Wells is a Republican, but the moral and the lesson of all this is that there should be a change in the administration of the Government.

Old Kentuck.

In our tables this morning will be found official returns from sixty-three counties, with the gains and losses as compared with the Democratic majorities in these counties in 1870, carefully calculated. It will be seen that Leslie's net gain on these majority, is 7,069. As our majorities in 1870 was 32,214, Leslie has to gain but 717 more to reach 40,000. Evidently it will be nearer 50,000. In these sixty-three counties whole Democratic vote in 1870 was 60,712. They gave Stevenson 81,284 in 1868, and Seymour 83,011. They now give Leslie, 85,723—a gain of 25,011 over the Democratic vote of 1870—a gain of 4,436 over Stevenson's vote—a gain of 2,712 over Seymour's vote!!! The fifty two counties yet to hear from gave Seymour 32,878. This added to the returns for Leslie will bring his vote up to 118,601. But unofficial reports from the remaining counties convince us that he is gaining on Seymour's vote in all parts of the State, and that his poll will reach at least 120,000. Kentucky sends greeting to her sister States, with assurance of greater Democratic strength than she ever had before—at least 140,000 Democratic voters, all white!—Louisville Ledger.

Take 'Em Down.

Those Radical editors who were of late so overjoyed over the result of the election in Kentucky, that they headed their leaders with pictures of Grant's bob- tailed spavined horses and Morton's sore rump'd turkey-buzzards, will do well if at once they discontinue these emblems of Radical greatness, as the State of Kentucky has polled a larger vote of the white element than ever before—by several thousand. The darkies were informed by the lying reckless tools of Radicalism, that the Democrats intended to remand them back into slavery, and would do so unless they voted against them. By this course, most of them voted against Leslie, and of course this made the Democratic majority less than formeely. But in point of numbers, the late vote shows 25,000 more white voters in that State than in 1870. Pull down you ensigns of fraud and lying humbuggery they stink in the nostrils of the people. Kentucky is safe, with a Democratic majority, over niggers and meaner whites, of 50,000!—Elkhart Union.

North Carolina Election.

Some little noise is being made over the recent election in North Carolinia, and the Radical newspapers are claiming the result as a Republican victory. To attach any political significance to the election is the merest clap-trap. The result is simply an adverse decision on the proposition for calling a convention to revise the State Constitution, and many prominent Democrats took an active part in opposition to the movement. They opposed it in its inception progress, because they thought the effort unwise and impolitic, and likely to result detrimental to the whole people. This condition of affairs well understood by all parties, and the defeat of the Conventionists will work no injury to the Conservative cause. The people of the State crushed the Radical monster at a recent election, and impeached Gov. Holden for high crimes and misdemeanors. They will not soon return to the embrace of a party that by every species of fraud and corruption, brought the State to the very verge of bankruptcy and spread dismay among the tax payers. It is not unlikely that the result in North Carolinan will promote the best interests of the people, and greatly aid the Conservative cause—Laport Argus.

A special dispatch from Long Branch this afternoon stated that H. T. Helmbold, well-known in this city, attempted sucide by shooting himself with a shot gun while out ostensibly snipe shooting. Dr. Helmbold denies that he attempted sucide, and says that while having discharged one barrel he put his mouth to the barrel to clear it and accidentally discharged it by touching the cock with his knee. His injuries are slight.

From the [illegible]
Death of Mrs. Vallandigham.

In our Obituary column to-day will be found the announcement of the death of Mrs. C. L. Vallandigham, widow of the eminent Ohio statesman, an account of whose sudden and tragic end, it became our sad duty to chronicle not quite two months ago. Although not quite unexpected by those who were familiar with the sensitive and delicate organization of the woman, and knew in consequence how certain it was that her loving and affectionate heart would soon succumb to the terrible blow of husband's death, the announcement will carry alike the [illegible] of grief and sadness to the thousand of her husband's admirers throughout the length and the breadth of the land of his birth and of his love. At the time of Mr. Vallandigham's death the writer of this received from an old and intimate friend of the departed statesman and his estimable wife the prophecy that the former would not for many days survive the awful tidings of her husband's fate. The fulfillment of that prediction flashed yesterday from the mountains of Maryland to every quarter of the continent, carrying with it sadness and gloom not only the many intimate friends of the deceased, but to the thousands of other loyal hearts who knew her only as the bereaved widow of him whose banner, "torn but flying," they had followed through a hotly contested political battle field, and whose sudden taking off they had mourned with a sincerity of sorrow such as it is not the portion of many of earth's children, however gifted or distinguished, to waste. Mrs. Vallandigham received the tidings of her idolized husband's death while standing beside the coffin of a beloved brother. Although partially paralyzed by the shock, the strong yearnings of her love lifted her above the effects of physical and mental prostration, and gave her strength to perform the long and weary journey to her desolated home in Dayton in time to view the inanimate body of her husband of her choice before it was consigned to its honored resting place in the soil of his own Ohio, the State of his nativity, the Commonwealth of his love and scenes of his social and political joys and sorrows, trials and triumphs. For some weeks after her husband's funeral, Mrs. Vallandigham was confined to her bed by prostration superinduced by the terrible calamity that had torn her heart-strings asunder, and shattered the already exhausted physical strength of an originally feeble and delicate organization. As soon as she had rallied a little, upon the advice of a physician, she started on a trip to the home of her girlhood in Maryland in the vain hope that a change of air and scene would result in a change for the better. How vain that hope was, the dispatches from Cumberland show. Mrs. Vallandigham was a woman singularily refined, loving and sensitive, and one illfitted by disposition to be the companion of the man whose bold and daring nature led him to joy in the storms of life rather than to walk by the still waters of peace or to lie down in the green pastures of idleness, a nature that told, with the eloquence of a shattered constitution, how terrible was the shock given by a husband simple sentence of exile might well illustrate with a new bathos when the tragical closing scene came, Irving's tale of the Broken Heart. Could we call her back to a weary life by one word of ours—who, as Dickens said over the grave of "Little Nell," who would speak that word!"

It is not an uncommon thing this hot weather, as stock trains are passing the water houses along the Railroad to open the valve and give them a good drenching; but when it comes to a passenger train, with its handsome sleeping coaches, filled with the elite of our eastern and western cities, it is something of a wonder to behold. But such was the case at the depot here on Friday last. Just after the 1 P. M. train had taken water, the fireman threw up the pipe that conveys the water to the engine, but the water did not stop worth a cent, and on went the train, with its open windows, and in a short time some of each of the coaches were filled to the depth of several inches with water. The scene was very amusing to outsiders, as well as to some insiders who were lucky enough to escape the volume of water that was being thrown upon them. Some laughed while some cried; one old lady and gentleman got a tremendous ducking; another gentleman was taking a quiet nap, but suddenly awaking, he found more than a Southern breeze coming in at his window. There are two tanks in the water-house, holding several hundred barrels of water which all ran out. The cause was a piece of iron getting in the valve.—Munice Democrat.

Last Saturday morning, while workmen were engaged in heating wagon tires at the lower shops of the Studebaker Bros. Manufacturing Company, one of them named Nathan was in the act of pouring a pail of water on the coals, the heat from which seemed insufferable, when he stumbled and fell headlong into the pit. The latter contained a bed of living coals, about a foot in depth, into which his limbs sank. Almost immediately rescued by a fellow workman he was burned in the most frightful manner. The unfortunate man was at once conveyed to his boarding house, and from thence to Chicago, on the arrival of his brother, a merchant there, who had been telegraphed for.—South Bend Union

President Grant, on the 8th, sent a communication to General Pleasonton, formally suspending the latter from the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue. On receiving the notification, Pleasonton vacated the office, and Deputy Commissioner Douglass immediately entered upon the duties of the position.

When a President surrounds a political convention with soldiers in order to exclude from them those citizens who are opposed to his nomination, the liberties of the people are in danger.—N. Y. Sun.

It is reported that Gen. McCook, the Democratic candidate for Governor, of Ohio, has become insane, and has withdrawn from the canvass. This is only rumor, however.

The French Canadians.

The French Canadians, as we see them to-day, are a very different people from what they were fifty years ago. With respect to the state of education, commercial enterprise, and [illegible] among them half a century ago, the less said the the better. We will [illegible] them as any traveler will find them to-day.

They are of the average height, [illegible] and stouter than the people of France, though lacking the muscularness of carriage and [illegible] of the Frenchman. The prevailing type of face is distinct from that of the English Canadian. It is dark and stern, while a gloom hangs over the countenance, which, however, is often relieved by a pleasant versatility of expression peculiar to the French character. The hair is remarkable for its luxuriance, darkness, and tendency to curl.

The French Canadians manifest a hereditary pride in dress. The upper class dress without fault; but the middling and lower classes verge upon the vulgar. A French servant-girl will appear on Sundays and church holidays in all the colours of the rainbow,—enormous chignon, crinoline, et cetera, in the most extravagant extreme. Butcher-boys and capmen strut around in conscious suits of the brightest yellow, brown, and velvet, with black beaver hat, and a lavish display of pure oroide. The poorer classes strive and strain to keep up appearances beyond their means, and periodically the French clergy censure their extravagance from the pulpit. The days of beef-moccasins and home-spun cloth have vanished, even among the laborers. The interesting "Jean Babtiste" of twenty or thirty years ago, clad in the primitive gray or blue flannel coat and breeches, and the peculiar worsted cap called a "tuque," with variegated colored sash, has become traditionary in the cities. It has even disapperared from the capstands and wharves of Quebec city, and those who wish to see it must look at its representation on the copper coins of the "Banque du Peuple," in the masquerades in the skating rinks, or in the water colors of Kreighoff and and Jacobi. Within the last twenty years, English and French Canadians have become so blended in many social respects that old distinctions of dress have been almost entirely obliterated, and there is not the same effort made to retain unsuitable fashions simply because they happen to be French.

The French of the cities do not, as many suppose, speak pure French. I have heard Parisians affirm that at first they had some difficulty in understanding perfectly the most of what educated French Canadians would say, owing to the introduction of a peculiar idiom and the intermixure of English, producing a patois different from anything heard in France. They speak faster than the old French; their preachers and lawyers plead in a high vehement tone and with an excessive display of emphasis, which to the quieter Anglo-Saxon seems extravagant and somewhat absurd. They gesticulate in Quebec precisely as they do in Paris, and use many explotives in ordinary conversation. In the politest assemblies "Mon Dieu" is a common expression of astonishment, dread, and sorrow. They learn the English language much easier than the English seem to learn French, and for every English Canadian who speaks French there are twenty French who can converse fluently in English. As a traveler gravely remarked, "even the little French children speak French." There is a liveliness in their conversation which we do not hear in the English.

They are excessions. Business is willingly suspended at the call of the Church to commemorate the birthbay or death of saint, the morning being spent in church, and the rest of the day wherever they please. They have an Athenian penchant for the theatre.

They enjoy their holidays to perfection, and are the most easily amused people on earth. They are passionately fond of vocal and instrumental music and dancing, and have an especial for "gay arts."

The courtesy of all the French Canadian citizens, rich and poor, is proverbial. The very beggars constrain you by their civility to give them alms, and the capmen cajole you by their politeness to increase their fare. They are a very sociable people, delighting in company at home and abroad, in clubs and associations. Nothing makes Lower Canadian society more agreeable, especially in the fashionable assemblies of winter, than the intermingling of the two races, with their divergent characteristics and different shades of manner. Looking at the sociable rec-ord of the past fifty years as it has existed, with few interruptions, between [illegible] and [illegible] Canadians, [illegible] forgetful [illegible] of Wolfe and Montcalm, [illegible] Trumbull [illegible] is [illegible] have lost [illegible] battle fields by conquering the affections of English maidens, belle Canadienne," one is forcibly struck with the social changes brought by time and necessity, and [illegible] Lord Durham's [illegible] [illegible].

NEW MUSIC.—Two songs that have in the short space of three months, attained a popularity seldom reached by any musical production, are 'Three Little Words' ('I Love You,') by J. A. Butterfield, author of 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie,' etc., and 'The Beautiful Days That are Past,' by Frank Howard, author of 'Guess Who?' and 'Little Barefoot.'

The melody of 'Three Little Words' is as sweet a wild-wood bird's love song, and the words as beautiful as a flower strewn prairie. Critics concede 'The Beautiful Days That are Past' to be Mr. Howard's master-composition, and the author himself says it is his best song.

Sold by all music dealers, and mailed to any address for 35 cents each. Address THOS. W. MARTIN, Publisher, Chicago, Ill.

Pic-nic.—There is talk of an excursion to Pleasant Lake to indulge in a grand pic-nic. We hope it will meet with the the sanction of our citizens. We certainly ought to enjoy one good pic-nic during the season. Let it come off by all means

Music Lessons.—Those desiring to take lessons on the instrument can receive instructions from Mrs. Mays, who has been prevailed upon to teach a class. Applicants are requested to call at the Courier office, front stairs.

As Mr. Baker was falling trees, in the bottom east of town, one of the many town cows passed in under, receiving the tree upon her back, breaking it and the poor animal had to be killed. She belonged to Mr. Wolf, and is quite a loss to him.

"This is the 200th application in a week. Go to the devil. I can't hire every d—d fool." That's what they say Mr. Greeley wrote to a man who ask for a situation. The receiver couldn't make it out, so he took it down to the Tribune counting room and the cashier, supposing it to be an order for $200, paid him that sum.

Who Next?—A young man who [illegible] for being sharp, recently sent a dollar to New York to one of those numerous firms who are always advertising some novelty, to find out how to write without pen and ink. In a few days he received an answer telling him to write with a pencil. Who's the next greenhorn customer?

An old and experienced railroad man from Fort Wayne, who recently passed from here to Liberty Mills over the [illegible] R. R. says it is the best road he ever traveled over. Messrs. Quick & Co., are neither sparing time or money to make the road a first-class one from the beginning.—Col. City Post.

NOTICE.

All persons who are in arrears on the payment of interest on school loans are hereby requested to settle the same [illegible] that [illegible] Sullivan, [illegible]

We met T. Standfield Taylor at Fort Wayne, last Saturday. Stan. was after [illegible] paper. The following [illegible] numbers: "A house on the Hendersown road, about four miles [illegible] by lightning and instantly killed." Go on, Stanfield in the noble work.

Chas. Kloth, our enterprising clothing merchant, goes east next week for a new stock of dry goods, clothing, and piece goods, with [illegible] selection, and be ready on his return to supply his many customers with a variety and quality not excelled elsewhere.

Four good habits: punctuality, accuracy, steadiness and dispatch. Without the first time is wasted; without the second, mistakes the most hurtful to our credit and interest, and that of others may be committed; without the third nothing can be well done; and without the fourth opportunities for advantage are lost which it is impossible to recall.

You can buy, at the popular Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block, Ft. Wayne, Ind., good all wool casimere suits for ten dollars, better ones $15, and the best for $18. Call and see them.

Railroads build up towns, railroads [illegible] towns [illegible] an instance, Kendallville, Ind., [illegible] a great wheat market and lively town, and now by the opening of another road, is on the decline. We see it stated that over one hundred empty houses are now lacking tenants in that town.

Kosciusko Co. Fair.—We are in receipt of a very handsome complimentary pass to the Kosciusko County Fair to be holden on Sep., 27th, 28th and 29th, at Warsaw. This county has the reputation of getting up a first-class fair, and we trust that it will be even more largely attended than ever. The officers will please accept our thanks.

School Books, Stationery, &c.—F. E. Davenport, our popular druggist, has just received a new invoice of school books, and is now ready to supply all with any series at reduced prices. He has also just received a very fine assortment of stationery, with which to supply the d mand.—Those wanting a good article of writing paper should call at his drug store, opposite the Court House.

Still They Come.—Our accomplished young attorney, D. D. Moody, Esq., will doubtless soon have occasion to change the style of his card. In that case it would be "Moody & Son," the little stranger having arrived last Friday morning. He glories in ten pounds of dimples, laughing eyes, and muscles ever on the go, and "Domby & Son" are nowhere. Who next?

Markley, Schrader & Co., appear with a new advertisement this week. This is the most extensive house in Fort Wayne, and we know them to be sterling business men. They keep a fine stock of everything in their line, and are ready to supply the trade at lowest prices. Our country merchants desiring to stock up could not do better than to give them a call.

All the clothing men are crying clothing is going up since the advance in war, but the popular Red Front Clothing House are selling goods cheaper than ever. We purchased our winter goods in May when they were very low, and will give our customers the advantage. Come and see us at No. 5 Keystone Block, Fort Wayne.

A religious paper prints the following paragraph: "It is asked of all newspapers desiring the spread of truth and the destruction of error, that they publish this request and prayer to Almighty Power, that on the three first Sunday nights in October, 1871, there shall appear in the heavens a [illegible] light in the shape of a great cross—and furthermore all good people are urged to pray earnestly for this miraculous sign.

Salt 'em Down.—If the people wish to have fresh cucumbers all winter, they need only to prepare them as for the table, and then salt them down in layers in crocks, the [illegible] of which can be made air-tight This is the way the Russians have fresh cucumbers to eat with their black bread all winter. We find salt a very pleasant condiment to add to them in their season, with pepper and vinegar, and if people do not like salt, they have only to freshen them. Tomatoes can thus be preserved as well.

Root & Co, of the New York store, not that shoddy concern that goes by the same name, where you may stand a good chance of being swindled but No. 90 Columbia street, remember the place, also throw their flag to they breeze in the shape of a new advertisement this week. This is one among the reliable dry goods houses of that city, the re mainder of whom advertise in the Courier and when you go there you may expect to be treated in a just and honorable manner. Remember this when you go to Fort Wayne.

The Grain Trade.

Auburn is rapidly growing in importance as a grain market, the receipts amounting to from 600 to 1000 bushels per day. Yesterday $1,17 was paid for wheat, and our farmers are generally taking advantage of the advance. We are glad to see that our merchants are generally alive to the importance of making this the great trading point in the county, as the county seat should be. While we have other good trading points possessing advantages in a local way, we should have attractions that should induce a trade throughout the whole county.

Auburn Academy.—We paid a brief visit to this institution yesterday afternoon and found a much larger number in attendance than we anticipated. Mr. Colgrove who is in charge of the high school in the absence of Mr. McIntosh, yet unable to attend from sickness, has enrolled fifty five scholars from home and abroad. In Mr. Houser's department there are about fifty, while the juvenile department, under Mrs. Lowrey, has about the same, making in total an average attendance of one hundred and fifty. Everything seems promising, and all are very much interested.—We anticipate a very successful term.

[illegible] of our [illegible] upon the [illegible] of our hog [illegible] upon the principal streets. [illegible] or not to be made light of—[illegible] such [illegible].

We need rain very much and indications are at this writing that we will soon have some. The holes along our streets, where hogs do congregate are becoming dry, and [illegible] let it rain by all means.

All Right.—Several of the popular County officials of Steuben gave our place a visit last week and left without paying their hotel bills. This would [illegible] bad against said gentlemen, if we were to omit the fact that there were no hotel bills to liquidate. Call again.

Great Reduction.—Our grocers are coming down considerably in their prices, and to-day groceries can be bought here as cheap, if not cheaper, than at Ft. Wayne. Sugars are selling at from 10 to 12 cents per pound; coffee 18 and 21; tea $1,00; Syrup 80c to $1,00; [illegible]. Our farmers cannot do better in purchasing groceries than to come to Auburn, where the prices are down to the lowest notch.

—A man in DeKalb County was prosecuted at the recent term of court in that Co., for allowing Canada thistles to grow on his farm, but the thistle [illegible] and vindicated his right to raise Canada thistles, if he wished to. What else could be expected in a Democratic county?—Kendallville Standard.

How about that Republican Judge who decided the case, the Republican lawyer who prosecuted the case, and the Republican defendant who was charged with the crime. But what else could be expected under Radical misrule? Let us have peace.

NOTICE.

Is hereby given that there will be no grinding done at the Eagle Mills from Monday, August 28th to Monday September 4th.

W. W. Griswold.

W. H. McQuiston, our new dry goods merchant, appears this week with a new advertisement. Mac has opened out a very fine large stock, and is receiving a good share of trade already. He sends this week three hundred extra copies of the Courier, to as many of of our citizens who do not already take it. With such enterprise and good sense, he cannot fail to meet with every success. Be sure and give him a call when you come to town.

—We understand that the Baltimore & Ohio Extension has finally lit, and the Steuben, LaGrange and Goshen route is the [illegible] oysters on the half shell, P. P. Sorry for that.—Kendallville Standard.

Better wait, C. O., until the survey of that line is completed; you see, it may be necessary to know something about the grade and length of said line before they can come to a decision. We have no doubt your mind runs in that direction, but that ain't the road by a good deal. Keep cool, and you'll win the oysters yet.

To Those Afflicted.—We would remind them of the appointment of Dr. Burt, at Waterloo, at the Lent House, on Thursday September 7th. Dr. B. has had 20 years constant practice in the treatment of all chronic diseases. Those desirous of consulting him would do well to call early on the day advertised, for no doubt his room will be thronged by those who are in need of his services. See advertisement in this issue. 1w

We wish our friends residing in other towns would become a little more interested in making public the local news of their respective communities. People are apt to complain if they do not see in their county paper all the local news of the county. This we are unable to give, for we have found out by experience that it is impossible for us to be in more than half a dozen places at a time. Now if those who are interested in seeing the whole county represented will exert themselves a very little we hope there will be no further difficulty of this kind. The remedy is simply this: If you observe anything that is of interest to you, remember that it is of interest to a dozen others who may never have noticed it—Make a minute of it and send it to us. No matter if you do not have time to write out a long letter—just note down a single item if no more occur to you and mail it to the paper.—A little trouble of this kind will keep its own reward—to you in learning from others news in return for that which you have furnished—to us in being a medium through which all will receive the fullest local news.

Beware of Counterfeits.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All persons should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to this house in Fort Wayne this fall. Best goods and lowest prices.

Aug. 3,

Cheese Manufactory.—I am now manufacturing cheese for the trade, and have on hand a large lot, which I warrant good, not made of skimmed milk. My cows are fed on tame grass, clover and timothy and fresh pure water—no stagnant swamp water on the farm. I use Roe's patent premium cheese vat with improved heater, the best in the world, also Roe's improved ever and weight cheese press, patent expansion hoops, &c. I am now selling at 1 and 14 cents per pound. Dairy one-fourth mile south of Auburn, on the Fort Wayne road.

B. & O. RAILROAD.

We publish the following extracts from a letter written to the LaPorte Argus:

Albion, August 17, 1871.

[illegible] it is now certain that the [illegible] of the B. & O. R. R. to Chicago will be pushed forward to completion, in the shortest time possible. The organization for that special purpose was [illegible] Pittsburgh, on the 20th of July.

It were impossible to overrate the advantages of this great through railway, connecting the immense North West with the Atlantic and Europe, by a direct straight line, 100 miles shorter than any existing line. Every farmer who produces a bushel of grain or 100 pounds of pork or beef, or wool or butter, or anything else for market; every trader who has freights to pay; every man or woman taking passage on a train, anywhere within a hundred miles of this line, would be directly benefited by the powerful influence it would exert upon the prices of freights and fares. The aggregate advantages to the vast region contiguous to, and affected by it—through a single generation, will be almost fabulous. It would be well worth the while of some competent statistician to compute them. What magnificent results would his figures show?

The line, in every respect adapted to the realization of the greatest triumphs and advantages of this grand enterprise, has been found by actual survey, to run by way of Defiance, O., Auburn, and Albion, Ind., and so on towards Chicago—through the centre of a rich cultivated region, from Alvordo, O., to the west line of Indiana, of an average breadth of 20 miles—10 on each side, unoccupied by rival roads. This is a virtual air line for 228 miles, and direct toward its terminus, with very low average grade, the maximum, and that in but two or three places, being 20 feet to the mile, without any deep cutting, the average not over eight feet. For six miles through the centre of Noble county, where the worst ground was expected, there is no grade over 15 feet. This is fifteen miles, at least, shorter than the proposed one diverging at Fostoria, O., and running through Napoleon, and Bryan, O., Steuben LaGrange, and Elkhart Counties, Ind., and back to the direct line, at Wanatah. This 'round about' line is also afflicted with numerous [illegible] curvatures caused by twisting after practicable grades. Yet, Goshen, which is about a mile from [illegible] of the 'bend' of that line, assumes that the importance of her 'newspapers and manufactures' will induce the B. & O. R. R. Co., to adopt it, at an increased first cost of nearly half a million; and enormous perpetual expense and loss of time in maintaining and operating these superfluous 10 miles of zigzags? If the B. & O. Co., are running their road in search of newspapers, why not go to Philadelphia and New York? If for 'manufactures,' Massachusetts and Rhode Island would have been a better shoot.

Assuming, however, that the management of the B. & R. R. Co., is inspired by a comprehensive sagacity and foresight, grasping the development of immense and permanent results in the near future, in preference to small, apparent, temporary advantages, to be gained only by pertain [illegible] to the location. A single year after the construction of the road would exhibit both 'newspapers and manufactures' on this line, which would forever prevent 'Billy' and the 'Doctor' from instituting comparisons.

Sarjunes.

Through the kindness of John A. Campbell, Esq., of Butler, we are permitted to publish the following from a private letter received by him a few days ago, from Mrs. J. Merrill, a former resident of this county. Sumner County is the extreme southern county of Western Kansas and is not yet organized:

Oxford, Sumner County, Kansas, Aug. 6, '71.

Dear Friends:—Many weary miles lie between me and the spot where I last addressed you, I believe we were camped near Winterset, Madison County, Iowa, and [illegible] rests. We remained there until 10 o'clock a. m. the next day, when our [illegible] started on again. Our company consisted of three ox teams all heavily loaded, a small drove of cattle, a larger drove of children, two men with their wives and myself with my five children and no one to help me, my oldest child being only 12 years old, my husband having preceded me to prepare a place for our home For ten days we traveled over the most beautiful country I ever beheld in Iowa, and reached the little town of Afton, in Union County. The next day we traveled to Golden City, a small town in Ringgold County. The country being very broken, and for twenty miles it was up hill and down until we reached Bedford, Taylor County, the last town we passed in Iowa. Here, I expended $100 in purchasing young cattle to stock our new farm.—We traveled forty miles before reaching another town, Maryville, Nodaway County Mo. We next traveled over a long open prairie, with here and there a hut or board shanty, or tent, to note that some one had found their way into these [illegible]. The next town I passed was Savannah, Mo., which was the prettiest small town I ever saw.—We passed through and camped about a mile beyond the town for the night. The next morning three of our best cattle had strayed. We remained four days and searched for them, but our search proved fruitless and we went on sorrowing without them. We reached St. Joseph, the [illegible] safely in Kansas. I cannot begin to tell you the hardships attendant upon such a journey. After we crossed the river we took the wrong road, and night rapidly approaching, we hastened on hoping to find prairie upon which to encamp [illegible] no sign of prairie met our view. On one side a bluff [illegible] on the other side the timbered bluff apparently one hundred feet high, with the road cut out between. The night was one of pitchy darkness, and heavy as I thought I had become the thought of that road and that night yet sends a shiver through my whole frame. It must have been midnight when our road wound a little and we camped for the night, ate a cold supper and retired. The next morning we started early without breakfast fearing our cattle would all stray away. Our road the next day was nearly the same. After we passed Atchison, we came to an open prairie and had good roads for several days. We went through Topeka, a large and pretty place and crossed more rivers than I would have looked for in traveling a thousand miles. At last we reached the Arkansas river, we ferried across and half an hour drive brought us to the end of our long tour, worn out, and exhausted with the long journey, from Webster Co., Iowa, to Sumner County Kansas. In my next I will describe the country here.

For fresh wounds in man or beast it is claimed that there is nothing to [illegible] to [illegible]. It is said to act like a charm on such wounds.

Every parent is like a looking-glass for his children to dress themselves by. Therefore, parents should take [illegible] clear [illegible] good example is a rich inheritance to the rising generation.

Hall's Journal of Health says: "The old and young delight in [illegible] to them the greatest luxury. Half the diseases of humanity would be swept from existence if the human body were [illegible] time.

Tomato Soup.—Two and a half lbs. of veal or lamb, 1 gallon of water, 2 quarts of fresh tomatoes, peeled and cut up fine. Boil the meat to shreds, and the water down to two quarts. Strain the liquor, put in the tomatoes, stirring them very hard, that they may dissolve thoroughly; boil half an hour. Season with parsley, or any other herb you prefer, pepper and salt. Strain again and stir in a tablespoonful of butter, with a teaspoonful of sugar, before [illegible]—Exchange.

Curing Skins Without Removing the Hair.—A correspondent sends the following recipe for curing skins without removing the hair: Take of soft [illegible] bran [illegible] Dissolve all together and place the skins in the solution, and allow them to remain there twelve hours; then remove and clean them well, and again [illegible] twelve hours longer if necessary. The skins may then be taken out, well washed, and dried. They can be beaten soft if desired.—Journal of Chemistry.

All soups are better to be made with [illegible] the [illegible] which [illegible] flavor and nearly all of its juices. It is therefore better economy to hash or slice your cold meat, and buy fresh for soup. Soup should not boil very hard, as that has a tendency to toughen the meat. Fat meat is not proper or healthy for soup as the leaner parts of the [illegible]. The fat does not impart much flavor, and is not palatable. Soup may be kept until the next day, before it is heated over again skim off the cake of fat which congeals on the top.—Exchange.

Biliousness.

Bad blood, too much blood, giving headache, bad taste in the mouth of mornings, variable appetite, sickness at stomach, chilliness, cold feet, and great susceptibility to taking cold; no one person may have all these symptoms when bilious, but one or more is always present.

Sometimes a bilious person has a yellow tinge in the face and eyes, called 'bilious, because the bile, which is yellow, is not withdrawn from the blood it is the business of the liver to do that, but when it does not do it, it is said to be torpid, to be lazy, does not work, and the physician begins at once to use remedies which are said to "promote the action of the liver."

It has been discovered, within a few years that acids "act on the liver," such as nitric acid, elixir vitriol, vinegar; but these are artificial acids, and do not have the uniform good effect of natural acids, those which are found in fruits are berries.

Almost all persons become bilious as the warm weather comes on; nine time out of ten, nature calls for her own cure, as witness the almost universal avidity for "greens," and "spinach" in the early spring, these being eaten with vinegar; and soon after, by the benign arrangement of Providence, the delicious strawberry comes, the raspberry, the blackberry, the whortleberry; then the cherries and the peaches and apples, carrying us clear into the fall of the year, when the atmosphere is so pure and bracing, that there is general good health everywhere.

The most beneficial anti-bilious method of using fruits and berries as health promoters is to take them at dessert, after breakfast and dinner; to take them in their natural, raw, ripe, fresh state, without cream or sugar, or anything else besides the fruit themselves.

Half a lemon eaten every morning on rising and on retiring is often efficacious in removing a billious condition of the system, giving a good appetite and greater general health.—Dr. W. W. Hall.

Queer.

There arrived recently at Richmond Springs two beautiful belles from New York City. Their trains were [illegible] their costumes wonderful as to fabric, fearful as to expense; rich and rare were the gems they wore, and it was estimated by good judges that their complexions cost at least ten dollars [illegible]. The exercised "Pink and White Tyranny" over all the poor gentlemen invalids who were seeking health at the springs, and were the envy of the aspiring lady invalids who were [illegible] around the springs in search of a longer lease of the world and its vanities. These belles arose one morning from refreshing slumber, and [illegible] to renew their beauty by sulphur bath. To the bath they went with dazzling flakes of the previous evening's rose and pearl still on their faces. Alas! that, in this instance, a thing of beauty was not a joy forever. The sulphur changed those lovely, those expensive complexions to blue-black. The color would not come off. Those complexions were first class and warranted to wash, and those belles thus unexpectedly put under the protection of [illegible] went away from Richmond Springs in haste. They are now under the care of an expert chemist in New York.

There is a [illegible] this story [illegible] what [illegible] Each reader can select a moral to suit.

It is the duty of every true woman to look as beautiful as she can. It is her [illegible] world [illegible] and [illegible] it. Her sense of the beautiful should always and everywhere be cultivated, for this will her thoughts be made [illegible] the home of every [illegible] lovely things. Refinement comes of a love of all things beautiful.

An Irishman said he did not come to this country for want. He had plenty of [illegible] an [illegible] the other day, a Portland man ran against a clothes line, which [illegible] his mouth and extracted [illegible] teeth without pay, and he didn't catch the dog either.

A Lowell (Mass.) man kept the dead body of [illegible] in alcohol [illegible] it with his wife, whose death he was expecting, and who died a few days ago.

'Harry,' said a young lady on a seat before us at the theatre last evening, 'how I should [illegible] actress!' 'An actress [illegible] must be so nice to be made love to in such pretty words every evening!'

A married lady of our acquaintance thus sums up three years' experience of married life: 'The first year my husband called me 'dear;' the second year, 'Mrs. A and this year old 'sorrel top.' The last I couldn't stand.'

A Newark boy was frightened by a [illegible] a few days ago, and [illegible] going in to bathe while heated, came out [illegible] with what the doctors affirm is original hydrophobia, unmistakable in its character.

Johnny was telling his ma how he was going [illegible] and [illegible] you expect to do for a living when you get to be a man?' 'Well I'll get married and live with my wife's pa.'

A naughty little boy, blubbering because his mother would'nt let him go to the river on Sunday, upon being admonish [illegible] swimmin' with 'em, ma. I only want to go down and see the [illegible] little boys drown or go ing a swimmin'.

A gentleman having a pony that started and broke his [illegible] neck, a [illegible] told him that he wanted to purchase him for his wife to ride. 'No,' says the other, 'I will not sell the little fellow, because I intend to marry again.'

A quaint old gentl eman, of an active stirring disposition, ha a man at work in h's garden who was quite the reverse—'Jones,' said he, 'did you ever see a snail?' 'Certainly,' said Jones. 'Then, said the other you must have met him for you never could overtake him.'

A schoo teacher asked a new boy who made the glorious universe? but the boy couldn't tell; so the teacher got a rawhide and told the boy if he did'nt tell he would whip him. The boy look at the whip, and snivelled out: 'Please, sir, I did; [illegible] won't do it again [illegible].'

It is related that when Beecher was in the country, last summer, he lost his hat, and found it about two weeks, in a barn where he had left it, but with four eggs in it. This was as it should be. Beecher had just written an eulogy on the hen; why shouldn't the [illegible]

One exceeding warm day in June a neighbor met an old man, and remarked that it was very hot. 'Yes,' said Joe; 'if it wasn't for one thing I should say we were going to have a thaw.' 'What is that?' inquired the friend. 'There's nothing froze,' said Joe.

A Lecturer [illegible] to his village audience the word phenomenon: [illegible] what a phenomenon is. Well, I'll tell you. you have seen a cow, no doubt. Well a cow is not a phenomenon. A western preacher explained the passage [illegible] the Israelites [illegible] editor interrupted saying there is no [illegible] the [illegible] said the excited preacher, 'this happened thousands of years before the age of geography, and before there was any equator [illegible] and sisters, I have answered the gentleman completely.'

Two old plowmen down east were telling tough stories of their exploits in breaking [illegible] 'Twas up in Dixmont twenty-seven years ago this spring, I was plowing in stump ground with a team of nine pair of cattle for Sol Cunningham; we were going along, makin' not very smooth work among rocks and stumps; well, one day the pint o' the plow struck agin a sound stump four foot through, [illegible] square across the heart, and I was follerin the plow through, when the thought flashed through my mind that [illegible] might snap together and pinch my toes, so I just gripped the plow-handles firm and swung my feet up out o' the way, and the [illegible] thing up standin'. Well, I tightened my [illegible] and Jim Swithin, he and Sol was drivin', they spoke to the cattle and we yanked that stump right out by the roots and it had awful long ones.'

'It must a been strainin' on your suspenders,' said the other.

'My wife knit them.'

Affected simplicity is refined imposture.

VINEGAR BITTERS

[illegible] San Francisco, Cal., and 34 Commerce Street, N. Y.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, [illegible] poison [illegible] beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion, or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, [illegible]

[illegible] Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

TRUE HEROISM.

Let others write of battles fought,
On bloody, ghastly fields,
Where honor greets the man who wins,
And death the man who yields;
But I will write of him who fights
And vanquishes his sins,
Who struggles on through weary years
Against himself, and wins.

He is a hero staunch and brave
Who fights an unseen foe;
And puts at last beneath his feet
His passions base and low;
Who stands erect in manhood's might,
Undaunted, undismayed—
The bravest man who drew a sword
In foray or in raid.

It calls for something more than brawn
Or muscles to o'er come—
An enemy who Marcheth not
With banner, plume and drum—
A foe forever lurking nigh,
With silent, steady tread,
Forever near you board by day,
At night beside your bed.

All honor, then, to that brave heart,
Though poor or rich he be,
Who struggles with his better part—
Who conquers and is free,
He may not wear a hero's crown,
Or fill a hero's grave,
But truth will place his name among
The bravest of the brave.

A "Little Affair" in Louisiana.

On a certain occasion since the beginning of 1871, in the little town of Ouachita City, on the banks of the Ouachita river, about twenty-five miles above the city of Monroe, two gentlemen (Johnson and Jones) concluded to play one game of seven-up for $5. They took their time, and interspreed the game with several drinks They finally finished the game. Johnson being the winner, raked in the money.

Jones studied about it a while. He made up his mind that it was not right for Johnson to take the money, as they were neighbors—not gamblers, any way—and they [illegible] only in [illegible].

'You are not going to take that money, are you?'

'Yes, indeed I am,' said Johnson.

'Well,' said Jones, 'you had as well take it out of my pocket.'

'Now, Jones, take that back.'

'I shall not take it back, and if you are not satified, help yourself in any way you choose.'

'But, Jones, I insist that you take it back because I don't steal, myself.'

'I shall not take it back, and now repeat that you had as well have stolen that money out of my pocket. If you wish a difficulty, you can have it in any way you like.'

'Well, then, we will shoot it out,' said Johnson.

'Very well, sir,' said Jones, 'mention you time and place.'

Without any further ceremony all the arrangements were made for the duel to take place that evening. Many of the neighbors were there, and at once concluded to have the fight come off. They knew Johnson, who had proposed the shooting, would back out unless he could be encouraged. They knew, on the other hand, Jones would stand up without flinching. They loaded the pistols with blank catridges and informed Johnson of the fact, but did not let Jones into the secret. They did this to make Johnson stand, which, of course, made him fearless, bold and daring. He went to the appointed place, and Jones was there, cool and calm. The moment for action arrived, and all parties took their posititions—the distance being 10 paces. The pistols were handed to Johnson and Jones, in death like silence—every one being serious as death. The count commenced—'one!'

'Stop!' said Johnson. 'It is understood by all parties that there ain't no bullets in these pistols.'

Jones, hearing this, and knowing nothing of it before, rather staggered forward, reeling, looked into the muzzle of his pistol, and cried out [illegible] 'If there ain't bullets in mine!' and at the same time [illegible] down [illegible].

This was too [illegible] for Johnson. He broke for the nearest house, which was about two hundred yards, and they say he doubled up like a four bladed knife, and has not been seen, but sent word back that he might 'shoot it out' if he choosed, but he wanted none in his. Jones won the field against all odds.

Luck and Labor.

Last week two boys left their country home [illegible].

'I shall see what luck will do for me,' said one.

'I shall see what labor will do for me,' said the other.

Which is the better to depend upon luck or labor? Let us see.

Luck is always waiting for something to turn up.

Labor will turn up something.

Luck lies in bed [illegible]

Labor jumps up at six o,clock, and with busy pen or ringing hammer lays the foundation of a competence.

Luck whines.

Labor whistles.

Luck relies on chances.

Luck slides down to indolence.

Labor strides upward to independence.

Which is likely to do most for you, my boys?

'Good evening Brother—I am glad to see you out [illegible] tonight,' said a good sister to a brother who does not regard himself unusually pious. 'You are,' replied he, 'well, you might have had that pleasure every week if you would come, for I am always here.'

Little Johnny's mother reached for him with her slipper the other evening for hooking the jelly, and after giving him a good spanking, she was surprised to hear him laugh over it, and demanded the cause of it. 'I was thinking how I had fooled you; it was Carry who hooked the jelly.'

A Family Quarrel.

The wife of a gentleman at our hotel [illegible] at her husband's expense. It is well understood that the [illegible] pleasantly together [illegible] rarely [illegible] public. The other evening, when taking their usual drive—they are both high spirited and hard to curb, and when their tempers are aroused there is no controlling them—one word brought on another when the husband said: 'You will drive me mad.'

'I should call that an admirable drive,' retorted the wife.

'By —!' exclaimed the husband, 'if you say another word I will drive down to the sea.' They were then near one of the roads [illegible] of [illegible] Grant's cottage, that leads down to the beach.

'Another word!' screamed the lady, 'Drive where you please,' she added; 'into the sea, I can go as deep as you dare to go, any day.'

He became furious, took her at her word and drove the horses and vehicle into the ocean. [illegible] to swim. He held in, looked into her face, and she [illegible] in his.

'Why do you stop?' she demanded exultingly, exhibiting the slightest alarm.

'You are a devil!' he exclaimed, turning the horses about, making for the shore with all expedition.

'Pooh! pooh!' laughed the tormentor. 'Learn from this that there is no place where you dare go, where I dare not accompany you.'

'Except to—'

'The only exception,' she answered, with a chuckle. 'There, my dear, I will leave you.'

She had conquered. The pair returned to the house, and the only evidence of anything extraordinary that occurred was the appearance of the poor horses. The lady repeated the story to one or two female friends, and, of course, such things are too good to keep.—New York Commercial.

The fading of the flowers and the falling of the leaves; the decay of nature and the approach of winter, are all impressive emblems of the departure of man from the earth.

A Chapter on Kissing.

The following is clipped from a Kentucky paper: When a lark attempts to steal a kiss from a Kantucket girl, she says, 'Come, sheer off or I'll split your mainsail with a typhoon.' The Boston girls hold still until they are well kissed, when they flare up, and say, 'I think you ought to be ashamed.' When a young man steals a kiss from an Alabama girl, she says, 'I reckon it's my time now,' and she gives him a box on the ear that he don't forget in a week. When a clever fellow steals a kiss from a Louisiana girl, she smiles, blushes deeply and says nothing. When a man is smart enough to steal this divine luxury from them, they are perfectly satisfied. In [illegible] Massachusetts, when a female is saluted with a buss, she puts on her bonnet and shawl, and answereth thus: 'I am astonished at thy assurance, Jedediah: for this indignity I will sew thee up.' New York ladies receive a salute with [illegible] meekness; they follow the Christian rule—when smitten on the one cheek they turn the other also. And when a Barry girl gets kissed she very calmly remarks, 'Hans, dat ish good.'

New Albany now claims the champion 'meanest man' for Floyd county, in the person of a well to-do farmer, who begged a dinner from the wife of a baker in that city; but Lafayette insists upon Tippecanoe's claim. Her champion swindled a simple-minded laborer out of two years' wages for farm labor.

Susan Hinds, a young girl living with the family of William Bennett, near Shelbyville, committed suicide, on Friday evening, by placing the muzzle of a shot gun in her mouth and blowing the top and back of her her off. THE STOLEN NOTE.

BY A RETIRED ATTORNEY.

Except that he indulged too freely in the use of the intoxicating cup, John Wallace was an honest, high-minded man. His one great fault hung like a great shadow over his many virtues. He meant well, and when he was sober he did well.

He was a hatter by trade, and by industry and thrift, he had secured money sufficient to buy the house in which he resided. He had purchased it several years before, for three thousand dollars, paying one thousand dollars down and securing the balance by mortgage to the seller. The mortgage note was almost due at the time circumstances made me acquainted with the affairs of the family. But Wallace was ready for the day; he had saved up the money; there seemed to be no possibility of an accident. I was well acquainted with Wallace having done some little collecting, and drawn up some legal documents for for him. One day his daughter Annie came to my office in great distress, declaring that her father was ruined, and that they should be turned out of the house in which they lived.

'Perhaps not, Miss Wallace,' said I trying to console her, and give the affair, whatever it was, a bright aspect. 'What has happened?'

'My father,' she replied, 'had the money to pay the mortgage on the house in which we live, but its all gone now.'

'Has he lost it?'

'I don't know, I suppose so. Last week he drew two thousand dollars from the bank, and lent it to Mr. Bryce for ten days.'

'Who is Mr. Bryce?'

'He is a broker. My father got acquainted with him through George Chandler who boards with us, and who is Mr. Bryce's clerk.'

'Does Mr Bryce refuse to pay it?'

'He says he has payed it.'

'Well, what is the trouble the?'

'Father says he has not paid it.'

'Indeed!' But the note will prove that he has paid it. Of course you have the note?'

'No. Mr. Bryce has it.'

'Then of course he has paid it.'

'I suppose he has, or he would not have the note?'

'What does your father say?'

'He is positive that he never received the money. The mortgage he says must be paid to paid to-morrow.'

'Very singular. Was your father—'

I hesitated to use the unpleasant word which must have grated harshly on the ears of the devoted girl.

'Mr. Bryce says father was not quite right when he paid him, but not very bad.'

'I will see your father.'

'He is comming up here in a few moments; I thought I would see you first and tell you the facts before he came.'

'I do not see how Bryce could have obtained the note, unless he paid the money. Where did your father keep it?'

'Who was in the room when you put it in the secretary.'

'Mr. Bryce, George Chandler, my father and myself.'

The conversation was here interrupted by the entrance of Wallace. He looked pale and haggard, as much from the effects of anxiety as from the debauch from which he was recovering.

'She has told you about it, I suppose,' he said, in a very low tone.

'She has.'

I pitted him, poor fellow, for two thousand dollars was a very large sum for him to accumulate in his little business. The loss of it would make the future look like a desert to him. It would be a misfortune which one must undergo to appreciate it.

'What passed between you on that day?'

'Well, I merely stopped into his office—it was only the day before yesterday—to tell him not to forget to have the money ready by to-morrow As he took me into his back office, and as I sat there he said he would get the money ready next day. He then left me and went to the front office, where I heard him send George out to the bank, to draw a check for two thousand dollars; so I supposed he was going to pay me then.

'What does the clerk say about?'

'He says Mr. Bryce remarked, when he sent him, that he was going to pay the money.'

'Just so.'

'And when George came in he went into the front office again and took the money. Then he came to me again, and did not offer to pay me the money.'

'Had you the note with you?'

'No; I now remember he said he supposed I had not the note with me. I told him to come in next day and I would have it ready—that was yesterday. When I came to look for the note it could not be found; Annie and I have hunted the house all over.'

'You told Bryce so.'

'I did. He laughed and showed his note. With his signature crossed over with ink, and a hole punched through it.'

'It is plain, Mr. Wallace, that he paid you the money, as alleged, or he obtained fraudulent possession of the note and intends to cheat you out of the amount.

'He has never paid me,' he replied firmly.

'Then he has obtained fraudulent possession of the note. What sort of a person is that Chandler who boards with you?'

'A fine young man. Bless you, he would not do anything of that kind.

'I am sure he would not,' exclaimed Annie, earnestly.

'How else could Bryce obtain the note but through him. What time does he come home at night?'

'Always at ten time. He never goes out in the evening.'

'But father he did not come home till ten o'clock the night before you went to Bryce's. He had to stay in the office to post books, or something of that kind.'

'How did he get in?'

'He has a night key.'

'I must see Chandler,' said I.

'No harm in seeing him,' added Mr. Wallace; 'I will go for him.'

In a few minutes he returned with a young man, Chandler, who, in the conversation I had with him, manifested a very lively interest in the solution of the mystery, and professed himself ready to do anything to forward my view.

'When did you return to the house on Tuesday night?'

'About twelve.'

'Twelve!' said Annie; it was not more than ten when I heard you.'

'The clock struck twelve as I turned the corner of the street,' replied Chandler, positively.

'I certainly heard some one in the frant room at ten,' said Annie looking with astonishment at those around her.

'We're getting at something,' said I 'How did you get in?'

The young man smiled as he glanced at Annie, and said:

'On arriving at the door I found I had lost my key. At that momret a watchman happened along, and I told him my situation. He knew me and taking a ladder from an unfinished house opposite, placed it against one of the second story windows, and entered in that way.'

'Good! Now who was it that was heard in the parlor at ten, unless it was Bryce or one of his accomplices. He must have taken the key from your pocket, Mr. Chandler, and stolen the note from the secretary. At any rate I will charge him with crime, let what may happen. Perhaps he will confess when hard pushed.'

Acting upon this thought, I wrote a lawyers letter—demanded against you etc.'—which was immediately sent to Mr. Bryce. Cautioning the parties not to speak of the affair, I dismissed them.

Bryce Came.

'Well sir, what have you to say against me?' he asked stiffly.

'A claim on the part of John Wallace for two thousand dollars,' I replied, poking over my papers, and appearing supremely in different.

'Paid it,' he said, short as pie-crust.

'Have you,' said I, looking him sharply in the eye.

The rascal quailed. I saw that he was a villain.'

'Nevertheless, if within an hour you do not pay me two thousand dollars, and one hundred for the trouble and anxiety you have caused my client, at the end of the next hour you will be lodged in jail to answer a criminal charge.'

'What do you mean?'

'I mean what I say. Pay, or take the consequences.

It was a bold charge, and if he had looked like an honest man I should not have dared to make it.

'I have paid all this money, I tell you,' said he; 'I have the note in my possession.'

'When did you get it?'

'Got it when I paid the—'

'When you feloniously entered the house of John Wallace, on Tuesday night at ten o'clock, and took the said note from the secretary.'

'You have no proof,' he said, grasping a chair for support.

'That is my lookout. I have no time to waste. Will you pay or go to jail?'

He saw that the evidence I had was too strong for his denial, and drew his check on the spot for twenty-one hundred dollars, and after begging me not to mention the affair, he sneaked off.

I cashed the check, and hastened to Wallace's house. The reader may judge with what satisfaction he received it, and how rejoiced was Annie and her lover. Wallace insisted that I should take the one hundred dollars for my trouble; but I was magnanimous enough to keep only twenty. Wallace signed the pledge and was ever after temperate man. He died a few year ago leaving a handsome property to Chandler and his wife, the marriage between him and Annie having taked place shortly after the above narrated circumstance occurred.

One evening as I was sitting beside Hetty, and had worked myself up to the point of the question, sez I, "Hetty, if a feller was to ask you to marry him, what would you say?" Then she laughed, and sez she, "That would depend on who asked me." Then, sez I, "Suppose it was Ned Willis?" Sez she, "I'd tell Ned Willis, but so [illegible]." That kinder staggered me, but I was too 'cute to lose the opportunity, and so sez I agen, "Suppose it was me?" And then you ought to see her pout up her lip. Sez she, "I don't take no supposes." Well, now you see, there was nothing for me to do but to touch the trigger and let the gun go off. So bang it went. Sez I, "Lor' Hetty, it's me. Won't you say yes?" And then there was such a hullabaloo in my head I don't know exatly what tuk place, but I thought I heard a "Yes" whispered somewhere out of the skrimmage.

Writing for Newspapers.

Some people estimate the ability of a newspaper and the talent of its editor by the quantity of "original" matter which it contains. The "Literary Journal" truthfully says: "It is a comparatively an easy task for a frothy writer to write out daily columns of words—words upon any and all subjects. His ideas may flow in 'one weak, washy everlasting flood,' and his command of language may enable him to string them like bunches of onions, and yet his paper may be a meagre and poor concern. Indeed, the mere writing part of editing a paper is but a small portion of the work. The care, the time employed in selecting, is far more important, and the tact of a good editor is better shown by his selections than anything else; and that we all know is half the battle. But, as we have said, an editor ought to be estimated and his labors understood and appreciated by the general conduct of his paper—its tone—its temper—its uniform, consintent course—its aims—its manliness—its dignity—its propriety. To preserve these as they should be preserved, is enough to occupy fully the time and attention of any man. If to this be added the general supervision of the newspaper establishment, which most editors have to encounter, the wonder is how they can find time to write at all."

Vallandigham's Private Life.

The following correspondence from the late C. L. Vallandigham to his sister exhibits one of the many beautiful traits of Mr. Vallandigham's private character. In view of his recent death, it now possesses a peculiar and mournful interest, aside from touching tenderness and manly sympathy which it shows for the distress of a bereaved sister:

Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 12, 1869.

Mrs. M. E. Robertson, New Lisbon Ohio.

MY DEAR SISTER: I was absent in another county in the midst of a trial of an important case when Mr. Gillman's dispatch came, announcing Mr. Robertson's death.

I write now to assure you of my deepest sympathy with you and yours in this great bereavement. I feel sure that, though sorrowing, it is not as one without hope. In a little while we shall all follow, and, I trust and believe be reunited with the many dear and loved ones whom we now mourn, but who have only preceded us to those mansions in the skies where, purified and perfected spirits, we shall meet again and dwell together for ever, where the eye sheds no tear, the bosom heaves no sigh, the heart swells not with secret grief, and no sorrow ever comes. For surely it is a reality—but if a delusion, yet one to which I would fondly cling (associated as it is with earliest and most cherished memories of sainted father and mother) till heart and flesh failed me—that "There is a land of pure delight,

Where saints immortal reign;
Infinite day excludes the night,
And pleasures banish pain."

In this faith died all our household, and of the households for generations wherever we have inherited family and name, and let us cherish it with an unfaltering trust till we, too, shall lie down in the dust. I have long since ceased to look upon death with any emotion of terror, and like the patriarch Job, said daily, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come." So let it be with all of us. You remember the beautiful poem of Mrs. Hemans, "The Graves of a Household." [A like fortune has been ours, who in childhood grew up so lovingly together. Yet we shall meet together again, young and old, glorified spirits, in the "house not made with hands, eternal and on high."

Comfort yourself, therefore, my dear sister, under this great affliction and may the father of all mercies be gracious to you.

We are all well, and unite in much love to you all. Very affectionately, your brother,

CLEMENT.

The Indian question out West has been reduced by General Hancock to this simple alternative: If we hold the Indians to their reservations, and can't allow them to roam over the plains after the buffalo we must feed them; and we reckon that feeding our red brethren on domestic beef with a daily ration of five pounds to each Indian, at the Indian beef contractor's average of fifty cents a pound, will be cheaper than allowing the red men to roam the prairies in pursuit of the buffalo, and of emigrant trains, and droves of domestic cattle. Let us, then, feed the red man and keep him quiet.

'What is a Democrat?'—This question was addressed to a Democrat in a political conversation a few days since, by a red hot Republican. 'I would like very much to know what you call a good honest Democrat. Be kind enough to tell me what change I have to undergo to become such, and how I will know that I am changed.' 'Well,' replied the Democrat, 'go to a chicken roost, and if you can pass it by without feeling any inclination to 'confiscate,' you are an honest Democrat: but if you cannot resist the temptaton to bag the fowls, you are a Radical still and have not experienced a change.' The anxious inquirer had no more questions to propound.

The investigation must go on, and, if the private information we now possess, is reliable there will be a fearful reckoning before it is over. Prominent men besides the Governor are interested, and have been using a portion of this fund for the past three years.

One man in a hundred reads a book; ninety nine in a hundred read a newspaper. The New York Herald has a special cable dispatch, which brings the intelligence that the blight has appeared in Ireland and that the potato crop is almost ruined. The latter part of August is the season when the disease appears, and it has frequently happened that the entire crop was destroyed in a single week. In 1846 the crop was destroyed in a few days, though previously an abundant harvest had been anticipated. The distress which ensued is impossible to describe. The destitution was absolute and universal. Many of the peasantry died from hunger. For weeks and even for months the famine continued to spread, and disease went hand in hand with want. Discontent followed in the wake of death, and disorder and outrage, rebellion and riot, were the result of privation and suffering. In nearly every part of the country there were disturbances growing out of the famine, and at Dungarvon and other places many lives were lost in the conflict between the peasantry and the ruling classes. Not only in Ireland, but in England and America the potato famine was the leading topic of conversation. O'Connell besides himself with schemes for the relief of the distressed population. Wellington was appealed to for assistanced, on the ground that he had the care of the young Queen. New York came up gallantly to the relief of the hungry and dying population, and a great meeting was held in Tammany Hall, which resulted in the freighting of a ship to bear relief to the starving. And not in Ireland only was there destitution and death. Parts of Scotland suffered from famine, and even Paris felt the pangs of want. The Persian famine of the present year cannot be compared with it, and never before or was since was a season of such overwhelming and appalling calmity.

Knowledge Required in Farming.

There are many who look upon farming as rather a small business, who think that its successful prosecution requires only a little common sense—just enough to prompt the hardy worker to seek shelter in a rain storm, and a very little knowledge just sufficient to count a flock of sheep, or read a political newspaper. The opinion was once more general than now, for the world is growing wiser, yet at the present time it is entertained by many. It is an old and true saying, that "honor and shame from no condition rise," that honor is only acquired by acting well our part in whatever situation we may be placed. A man of ability and knowledge who devotes all his energies to his business will make it honorable and profitable no matter how insignificant that business may at first seem.

There is no business requiring such varied acquirements, so much knowledge, so much good judgement and commercial ability combined, as is necessary for the thoroughly accomplished farmer. He stands first among the manufacturers of the land, he makes the wheat and corn, the beef, mutton and pork, the wool and flax, and manufactures from the earth, the air, the water, nearly all that we eat and wear; and this not only done by farmers as a class, but almost every one produces many if not all of these articles.

The manufaturer usually confines his labors to the production of one article, but the farmer is by necessity compelled to make many. If he would make grain he must also make beef or butter and cheese, or mutton and wool; Hence the necessity of extensive knowledge. It is an easy matter for the manufacturer to ascertain how much wool will make a yard of cloth of a certain discription, and what will be its cost; but it is not so easy for the farmer to ascertain how much grass or hay or grain will make a pound of wool. The manufacturer can test a new machine, and ascertain by a few simple trials whether it will manufacture the desired article cheaper or better than the old one; but to ascertain how a pound of beef can be made the cheapest, what machine will convert hay into rich cheese in the cheapest and best manner, is a matter requiring a good deal more care and skill

Among his varied acquirements, the farmer should posess a knowledge of animal physiology, so as to be enabled to keep his stock in health and administer proper remedies in case of sickness. Vegetable physiology too must not be overlooked. Every day during the growing season, the farmer performs work for the growth of his crops founded on the known laws which govern vegetable life. Entomology is a science which the farmer is compelled to study to some extent, and often much more perhaps than he desires, but the more he does so the better he is fitted to wage a successful war against thousands of destructive foes.

In addition to all this, the farmer must be a merchant, for he must sell as well as manufacturer. He must in some measure take advantage of the rise and fall of prices, select the best time for selling and the best market, or after all his toil and anxiety he may find but a poor return.

When we contemplate this subject at which we have merely glanced in all its bearings, we are led to exclaim, Who is competent to this work? Heartily do we pity those who think that farming furnishes no scope for the exercise of knowledge or ability. If this opinion were entertained only engaged in other pursuits, it would be of no serious consequence; but we judge that many farmers have themselves imbibed such unfounded and unjust opinions in regard to their calling, and where this is the case there is an end to all desire for improvement. A man must have a good opinion of his calling, proper appreciation of its importance and the means and information necessary for its successful prosecution or he cannot hope to succeed.

[From New Albany Standard.]

Indianapolis Justice as Administered By Indianapolis Juries.

It will be remembered that some [illegible] ago L. P. Milligan, a citizen of Huntington, in this State, brought damages for false imprisonment against A. P. Hovey and others. The suit was begun in one of the State courts and afterwards transferred to the Federal Court at Indianapolis, and tried before Judge Drummond. The proof showed that Milligan was taken out of his bed at night in the dead of winter, and while he was so sick as to be unable to walk. In that condition he was taken to Indianapolis by an illegal body of armed men, and thrust into a prison without a fire, and treated in the most barberous and inhuman manner; that he was confined there several months and not properly fed; that he was afterwards dragged before a mob court, and the farce of a "trial" was gone through with, and several weeks of mob court sentenced him to death. By the intercession of friends the sentence of death was changed to imprisonment in the Ohio Penitentiary, where he was confined with felons for several months. It was also proved that by reason of said imprisonment he lost his business not less five thousand dollars, and was put to expense, in order to preserve his life of at least five thousand dollars more. Besides all this, the anguish of mind can not scarcely be computed in dollars and cents.

Judge Drummond, before whom the case tried—a Republican in politics though he be, yet an honest one—held upon questions of law involved in the case, that the imprisonment was illegal; that Hovey and his men who made the arrest, and the "court" that tried Milligan, had no legal authority whatever to act, and were therefore nothing more or less than mob; in fact, the Supreme Court of the United States decided the same thing.

Yet, in the face of all that, an Indianapolis jury brought in a verdict giving Milligan five dollars for his damages.

Now let us simply allude to another case. A few months ago there was a woman at Indianapolis called "Cal Bowen." Just who she is and what she is it not necessary for us to say, except that she was not like Ceser's wife above suspicion. Consequently about the time of the celebrated Young murder for which Mrs. Clem was tried and convicted, this "lady," Cal Bowen was arrested and nominally imprisoned a day or two on suspicion that she was in some way connected with the foul taking off of the Youngs, which suspicion probably was all groundless so far as we know or care; and as her guilt or innocence is not the point we are referring to, we will not stop to examine it.

However that may be, she sued the parties, as Milligan did, for damages for false imprisonment, and proved that the defendants—Robinson and others—did restrain her of her liberty for a day or two, but subjected her to no manner of cruel treatment. That case, too, was given to an Indianapolis jury, and they returned a verdict for three thousand dollars damages! Of the correctness or justice of that verdict we have nothing to say. It may have been all right. But compared to the Milligan verdict, it simply shows that a trial in Indianapolis by an Indianapolis jury is worse than a farce—it is in fact a shameless mockery.

But again, passing from the action of Indianapolis traverse juries, let us glance at some of the recent doings at the grand jury.

In 1867 Alexander Hamilton Conner, the present Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of this State, was elected to the office of State Printer, he then, and until recently, being one of the proprietors of the Indianapolis Journal, the leading Republican party organ of the State. He held the office two years and was then re-elected and held it two years longer. During his first term of two years he drew out of the State Treasury the enormous sum of $102,121,62—or, over fifty-one thousand dollars a year!

And thus his official record stood on the 23d day of January, 1869, when he was re-elected. From January 14, 1869, to March 9, 1871—a little over two years—Conner drew from the State Treasury, for "book paper" alone the sum of $54,209 85, being for over 6,344 reams! All of said facts indisputably appear by the records of the office of the Auditor of State, at Indianapolis; and all of the said charges against the State are sworn to as correct by Conner!

It is not our business now to say whether they are correct or not. We are now only alluding to an Indianapolis Grand Jury; and, to make our allusion plain, we will pass to another scrap of history.

Last winter Richard J. Bright, proprietor of the Indianapolis State Sentinel, was elected State Printer; and in passing, it may be remarked that he refused to divide the profits of the office, and for that sin it is said that he has incurred the enmity of certain newspapers in the State, the names of which is it no part of the case we are now presenting. However that may be, Mr. Bright has been prosecuted for perjury for swearing to an account for "book paper" for some ten thousand dollars.

The facts of the case seem to be as follows: The law makes it the duty of the State Printer to furnish the paper and then lay in his account there for. The practice has been, under Conner and all other State Printers to first draw the money, and then with the money make the purchase of the paper. Bright's perjury consists in having done exactly what Conner did probably fifty times. He swore to his account exactly as all other State Printers did—that is, he filed his account for the paper before he brought it instead of afterwards.

Now whether he and Conner alike were guilty, technically, of swearing to what was not the fact at the time is a matter we need not discuss. It is the action of the Indianapolis grand jury, and not the guilt or innocence of Bright and Conner, that we are examining. That each stand alike guilty or alike innocent is beyond dispute, for each did the business, as to drawing money in the same way.

But the strange point of the story is that the grand jury indicted Bright, and failed to find any bill against Conner!—and yet it is not strange in view of the conduct of the Indianapolis juries in the Milligan case and the Brown case. While such partisan jug-handle justice may suit the morals and legal standing of the State Capitol, it is exceedingly disgusting to the people of other localities.

Hendricks.

In all sections of the country the name of our distinguished fellow-citizen, Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, is prominently named in connection with the Presidency in 1872, and for the reason that he possesses the qualities that eminently fit him for the position in the present condition of our public affairs. He commands the public confidence and respect, on account of his personal and official integrity, and the belief that he could restore the administration of the Government to the purity, economy and strict regard for the public and private welfare that distinguished the early and better days of the Republic, when the extravagence, and nepotism of the present day would not have been tolerated. The current of popular feeling is now strongly in favor of Mr. Hendricks, and it will strengthen as the time approaches for the next Democratic National Convention.—State Sentinel.

A Mastodon.

From the Columbia City Post we clip a portion of the very interesting account of a recent discovery of a skeleton found in that county:

The writer having heard considerable concerning the discovery of the remains or skeleton of a huge monster, which was found by Mr. Loutzenhizer, residing on his farm in section 14 Jefferson township, Whitley Co., Ind., yesterday, I, in company with several intelligent citizens of Washington and Jefferson townships, proceded to the place of the skeleton of this huge monster as given to the writer are substantially as follows:—Not long since Mr. Loutzenhizer while engaged in digging a ditch for the purpose of draining a pond, discovered the remains of an animal supposed to be a mastodon. Eight teeth were discovered, the largest weighing seven pounds, the smallest three pounds; length, running paralell with the jaw, 7½ inches, breadth, 4½ inches; height, 7½ inches, the root being greatly decayed which, if it had been whole, would doubtless have added 7 or 8 inches more to the heigth, and also a proportional amount to the weight. The dimensions of the smallest tooth were: length, 4½ inches; width 3½ inches; height six inches. Two tusks were discovered, in a comparatively good state of preservation, being nine feet long, and circumference, near where attached to the head, being two feet; diameter, 8 inches; probable weight about 200 lbs.; and judging from the position in which they were discovered the animal's head was about four feet across. Several pieces of backbone were found, one being in good state of preservation; the width of this vertebra was 18 inches; height, 11 inches; the foramen or hole, for the reception of the spinal cord was 5½ by 3½ inches; weigh 12 pounds; width of peices of rib, 3½ inches. There was also quite an amount of other bones found, but considerably decayed. The search has not been carried on to any great extent. No doubt but that bones of greater importance will yet be discovered. The skeleton was found only two feet beneath the surface, at the bottom of the black muck. Were we to take the weight of an ordinary ox and compute the probable weight of this monster, we would doubtless astound the credulity of our readers; hence we desist. For the correctness of the foregoing dimensions, I hold myself personally responsible. Dr. Ihrig.

"Hard water" is not popularly supposed to be better than soft; and few persons, we think, would hesitate, if they had their choice, to use the latter. An advocate, however, of hard water has appeared in the person of Dr. Lethby, an english physician an author, who undertakes to prove by statistics that the healthiest and most long-lived people in England are those who live in those English counties which have a limestone formation, and that the shortest lived people are they who live in regions that produce only soft water. He extends his comparative tables beyond England, and claims to sustain his position by statistics of France and other countries. He also instances the larger cattle and sheep of hard water countries in England (Leicestershire among them) as a proof of the superiority of hard water. His theory is that the limy matter and salts contained in hard water supply the element of growth to the bony structure and tissues of the body.

Save the Apples.

The scarcity and high prices of genuine cider vinegar makes it always a profitable article of manufacture on farms which possess an orchard, and every farmer should [illegible] As soon as apples commence to fall from the trees, and the quantity that might be saved by a few minutes' work each day is something worth consideration. A small cider mill and press may now be purchased for ten dollars and upwards, and where there are twenty trees in the orchard, the amount saved by its use the first year would equal its cost. After very high wind sufficient apples might be gathered for a grinding, the juice might be turned into a cask, and additions, occasionally, until it is filled when, after being properly converted into vinegar, and racked off from the sediment it would find a good market in any town of considerable size. The pomace would be excellent for the hogs, and a small quantity placed in wide mouthed bottles or shallow pans and covered with water, would make very efficient traps for moths of all kinds. We have found this method of traping insects successful.

Two Memphis editors having been calling each other a lot of things, and now both of them have their meals brought to them in their sanctums, for fear if they go out to lunch they meet each other. When they are obliged to go out for a drink they are disguised so that no one will know them.

A NEW paper is talked of at LaGrange. The Standard is said to be in bad odor with all parties.—Ft. Wayne Rep.

WE hope our correspondent at Newville will keep us posted in the local news of that place. We would also like to here more frequently from our friend at Butler.

OUR Farmers' are now receiving their reward for their labor, and we trust they will not forget the small amount they owe for the COURIER.

OUR warehouse is completely filled with grain notwithstanding the shipment of several car loads every day. Cars cannot be procured to carry it away as fast as it comes in.

A NEW ware-house has been erected on the Fort Wayne Jackson & Saginaw R. R. Saginaw Railroad at Waterloo much like the one at this place. That is some evidence that our neighbor intends shipping grain to Detroit.

JUST received at Smith & Hare's another lot of Smoked meat.

HISTORY.—We have received a very fine copy of the History of the War in Europe, written by J. D. McCabe, Jr. This book is sold by subscription only, and an agent in each county is desired. Address, National Publishing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE Good Templars of this district composed of the counties of LaGrange, Steuben, DeKalb, Allen and Noble, will meet in Convention at Home Lodge, Ft. Wayne Ind., Sept. 12, 1871. The convention requests that lodges of the district send not less than five delegates.

IT is said that the prickly heat, so troublesome to some people, may be entirely avoided by taking a warm bath for ten minutes, and afterwards, annointing the parts affected with lemon juice. For those who suffer with this vexatious malady, it is worth a trial

WE notice quite a number of our exchanges are puffing Victoria Woodhull, the female candidate for President, doubtless in hopes of getting to be postmasters in their villages when she is elected. It is positively asserted that some of their relatives are women.

S. LAUFFERTY, our enterprising dry goods merchant, will sell goods at greatly reduced prices until the 15th of September only. He is now offering them at a slight advance on cost price and those who desire to take advantage of this reduction should call before the above date. His loss is the farmers' gain.

A WESTERN paper tells a story of a man who, having gone into a heavy purchase of pork on a falling market, was over heard praying in the following style: "O, Lord, for my sake, just advance hogs one cent per hundred, and I won't pay but four dollars per hundred for any more.—Amen.

DENTISTRY.—Our clever friend, R. Elson Esq., is doing good work in the dentistry line, and we are glad to see that he is receiving quite a large patronage. He is putting up some very fine work, in the way of sets, and gives great satisfaction in filling dacayed teeth. Be sure and call at his office in the brick block

THE Chicago Tribune asks and receives $22,000 for a column of advertisements one year. The business men of Chicago are keen to pay it. There is one house in Cincinnati that pays $4,000 a week for advertising. There are several in Cleveland even, who pay as high as $10,000 a year. Somehow these men don't break up; a liberal advertiser never does.

PAPER, Envelops and Ink, at the Fort Wayne Store.

PETIT JURORS.—The following is a list of Petit Jurors for the next term of the DeKalb Common Pleas Court, which convenes on the 3d monday of september. They are as follows: James R. Duncan, Miles Waterman, William Smith, John Jackman, James McClellan, John W. Dills, George Metcalf, Phillip Lung, Henry Scott, James Barton, Ephraim Shipe, Arnold Blodgett.

FIRE AT HARTFORD CITY.—We learn that Hartford City was visited with a severe conflagration on Tuesday night, and that the whole block on the south side of the square is in ruins. Among the victims is Jackson—proprietor of the Democrat. We hope that the citizens of Hartford will see that he has a new outfit, and that we shall soon welcome among our exchanges the Democrat in all its former glory.—Muncie Democrat.

THE local paper is an absolute necessity to the county and community where it is published. All of the city papers cannot supply the place of the home paper.—That should be the first love of every man and woman for with the paper is the locality identified. The paper gives the county and town where it is printed much of their importance in the world, and gives in detail the local news which cannot be gained by any other source.

Notice to Taxpayers.

The corporation taxes of the town of Auburn DeKalb County, Indiana, for the year 1871 are as follows:

Fifty cents on each $1 00 valuation and twenty-five cents on each taxable poll.

The corporation taxes of said town are now due and will be received by the undersigned at Guy Plum's Law Office in said town from the 31st day of August 1871 to the 30th day of November 1871.

JAMES L. BERRY, Town Marshal.

PERSONAL.—We are under many obligations to our accomplished friend E. L. Chittenden, Esq., of Fort Wayne, for special favors. Ras. is a prince among good fellows, and we regard him as the most accommodating and agreeable in the city.

S. S. Shutt, Esq., of Spencerville, returned last week from Panacca Nevada, where he has been sojourning during the summer, looking as though mountain life and gold hunting agreed with him.

MODERWELL & FOWLER, at Fort Wayne, keep all kinds of gentlemens' furnishing goods, and make shirts to order. This last is a specialty with them, and consequently they are giving great satisfaction as to the perfect fits they make for each customer. Their assortment of collars are the largest in the city, while they keep an extensive selection of all other goods always in style. Give them a call, corner of Calhoun and Berry-sts.

IN the late fire at Warsaw that place has realized what it is to be without a sufficiency of water in case of a destructive fire, and after a loss in several fires, of nearly a hundred thousand dollars the citizens now talk of Holly Water Works. In the same position would Auburn be placed if a fire was to occur to-day, no water, no means to quench a fire. We understand the Town Board has decided to put in a large cistern in the business portion of the place, and repair the old ones in different parts of the town.

WHITLEY CO., FAIR.— Those beautiful evidences of the handiwork of the craft are beginning to come in the shape of complimentaries to county fairs. We are in receipt of a very elegant one from the officers of the Whitley County Fair, to be holden at Columbia City, on Sept., 20, 21, 22, & 23. As we cannot return the favor we tender thanks for the courtesy. If we had the Eel River Road in condition so that passengers could be accommodated, we would promise our neighbors quite a large attendance from this place.

EEL RIVER.—We learn that track laying has already commenced from Columbia City this way on this road, and that a force will be put on this end of the work, for the same purpose, next week. The necessary material is now being delivered at the junction, by the Ft. W. J. & S. R.R. and we should not be surprised if cars would be running between here and Columbia City in a month. Messrs. Mansfield & Scanlan are almost through with their part of the contract.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting, at Cedarville, last Sabbath was largely attedded, the grove being literally alive with an attentive and well behaved assembly. The threatening weather of the morning doubtless kept some away, but there would have scarcely been room had they come. Auburn was quite well represented. Several sermons were delivered during the day among them, a very eloquent discourse by the Rev. Marine, of Fort Wayne, whom we regard as one of the most eloquent and talented clergymen in the State. The meeting closed yesterday.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—The first year of the publication of the COURIER is drawing to a close, and we want it distinctly understood that each subscriber must pay up at the close of the year, and as much sooner as possible. We are not publishing a paper for nothing, and we trust there is no one acting on this view of things. We want our money, and we hope there is not a single subscriber but what will promptly pay their dues. During the September term of court there will be a good chance to attend to this matter, and we would be glad if it was taken advantage of. Come and see us as soon as possible.

THE LAST CALL.—Treasurer Ryan informs us that he will commence a tour of the county next week, and call on all who are delinquent with their taxes, and the money, therefore, must be forthcoming, or a levy will be made on property to satisfy the claim. It is hoped there are none who will require this last resort to be made, as made it will be if the money is not paid. While a large majority has already paid up, it is but fair that the remainder should be required to do the same and no one can justly blame the Treasurer if he enforces the law.

CURE FOR THE WHOOPING COUGH.—We find the following cure for whooping cough in the Indianapolis Journal of July 7th.

A large number of children in this city are now suffering from that terrible complaint, whooping cough. It is not generally known that this disease can be cured in four or five days. All that is required is to take the children to the Gas Works every morning, and let them breathe the air in the purifying room, about ten minutes each time. Quite a number report there now each morning. By giving publicity to the above you will confer a great favor to these little sufferers and their parents. J. P. AVERY, M. D.

WHAT can be done to better our facilities for receiving and shipping grain, is becoming a serious question with our grain buyers. That our present facilities are altogether too limited to meet the rapidly increasing demand is daily becoming more evident. Not only is our grain house too small, but often it is impossible to get sufficient cars for the shipment of grain which frequently results in the grain-house becoming filled to overflowing, and consequently in great inconvenience to the farming community. An instance of this kind occurred last week.

It is at such a time as this that we realize the value that another railroad would be to us.

ALL the clothing men are crying clothing is going up since the advance in war, but the popular Red Front Clothing House are selling goods cheaper than ever. We purchased our winter goods in May when they were very low, and will give our customers the advantage. Come and see us at No 5 Keystone Block, Fort Wayne.

DETROIT & EEL RIVER R. R.

GRAND DEMONSTRATION AT MANCHESTER.

A FREE RIDE FOR EVERY ONE!

We learn through President Collins of the above road, that the formal opening of the road, between Columbia City and Manchester, some twenty miles west, will take place to-morrow. A large train has been provided and a general invitation is extended to everybody. The train will leave Columbia City, at 9 o'clock in the morning and return in the evening. Extensive preparations are going forward at Manchester, and the citizens are going to give a grand reception. We hope that this part of the line will be largely represented. By taking the evening train to Fort Wayne, you can reach Columbia City the next morning at about 7 o'clock. Let us be neighborly and when our time comes our friends on the west end will reciprocate.

A DRUG clerk in Newark recently put up a prescription for a young lady friend of a dose of castor oil. She innocently inquired how it could be taken without tasting it. He promised to explain to her, and in the meantime proposed to drink a glass of soda with her. When he had finished he said: 'My friend, you have taken your oil and did not know it.' The young lady was nearly crazy and cried: 'Oh, dear, it wasn't for me it was for my mother!'—Alliance Local.

The same girl done the same thing in Fort Wayne, a few weeks ago, and the last heard from she had repeated the dose at Omaha. We thought then her destination was westward, but, lo, she turns up at Newark. Poor girl how bad she must feel by this time. To much oil.

Commodore Foote and Sister's Troupe.

This celebrated troupe of artists will visit our place on Monday, the 4th of September, and a grand treat is in store for our citizens. Commodore Foote and Sister are the smallest people in statue in the known world, and it will be worth your money to see them, to say nothing of their entertainment which mental music, recitations, dancing, &c. They are assisted by a corps of first-class artists. The Elmira Daily Gazette, among many praises says: "Commodore Foote and Sister are the smallest, most attractive, and most talented little people we ever saw. Indeed their entertainments are truly surprising. The Tom Thumb party are perfectly eclipsed by these little people."

THE September Folio, edited by Dexter Smith, is upon our table. It contains the new popular song, entitled "Please Let My Brother Go!" (by the authors of "Put Me in My Little Bed!") also the "Mountain of Ice March," by H. J. Bennette, together with a fine portrait of Jenny Lind. The reading matter is as interesting as usual, George Lowell Austin's story, 'Louisette and the Wooden Shoe' being concluded in this number. The new humorous writer, Eph Muggins, contributes a funny sketch, and there are several original poems by well-know writers. The Folio is a marvel of cheapness, being sold by all news dealers at ten cents a copy. It is published by White Smith & Perry, Boston, at one dollar a year.

A FINE stock of all wool blankets at the Fort Wayne Store.

READ IT.—Here's the way we like to here folks talk.

"Good morning, sir, Mr. Editor; how is the folks to-day?
I owe you for next year's paper—I though I'd come in and pay;
And Jones is a going to take it, and this is his money, here;
I shut down on lenin' it to him, and then coaxed him to try it a year.
And here is a few little items what happened last week in town;
I thought they'd look good for the paper, and so I just dotted 'em down.
And here is a basket of cherries my wife picked expressly for you;
And a small bunch of flowers from Jenny—she thought she must send somethin', too.
You're doin' the politics bully, as all of our family agree;
Just keep your old goose-quill a floppin', and give 'em a good one for me.
And now you are chuck full of business, and I won't be takin' your time,
I've things of my own I must tend to—good day, sir, I b'lieve I'll climb."

The editor sat in his sanctum, and brought down his fist with a thump;
"God bless that old farmer," he muttered, "he's a regular, jolly old trump."

The Harvest.

The harvest just closed has been the pleasantest, most comfortable we have had in recent years to get through. The weather was cool, and the energies of both men and teams were not exhausted In common phrase, there was no 'bushing' in the harvest or hay fields. Some seasons are extremely exhaustive; men are worn out, and teams are reduced, making comperative rest a necessity. This year there seems to be no want of rest, nor indeed does there appear to be an opportunity for obtaining a release from labor on the farm. 'I never had so much work to do before, and never before felt so much like doing duty from morning till night as this season,' said a townsman to us. This expresses a general fact. Farmers have an unusual amount of work to do, and they have the health, strength, and will to do it. For all these blessings every heart must swell with gratitude and reverent thanks to the God of the harvest and the Rain—they come by day, nor are they withheld at night, till there is scarce room to receive them, or a want unsupplied.

NEW MUSIC.—The newest and best, (the most beautiful and brilliant,) consequently the most popular and fashionable songs are 'Three Little Words,' by J. A. Butterfield, author of ('Sweet Ethel May,') 'When You and I were Young, Maggie,' etc., and 'The Beautiful Days that are Past,' by (the popular) Frank Howard, author of ('Guess Who?' and) 'Little Barefoot.' The melody of 'Three Little Words' is as sweet as a wild wood-bird's love song, and the words as beautiful as a flower-strewn prairie. Mr. Howard, in a letter to the publisher, notifying him of the complexion of the 'The Beautiful days that are Past,' says: 'I think the song one of the best I have ever written.'

If your nearest music dealer does not have these songs on hand, send 35 cents for each one direct to the publisher, who will forward them to you by return mail. To persons sending the publisher the names and address of all singers they may know, he will, for one dollar, mail them two copies of one song, and one of the other and send a 35 cent piece free. Address the publisher, T. W. MARTIN, P. O. Box 547, Chicago, Ill.

BLESSED ARE THEY THAT MOURN.

BY A. L. B.

Oh! deem not they are blest alone
Whose lives a peaceful tenor keep;
The power who pities man, has shown
A blessing for the eyes that weep.

The light of smiles shall fill again
The lids overflow with tears;
And weary hours of woe and pain
Are promises of happier years.

There is a day of sunny rest,
For every dark and troubled night;
And grief may bid an early guest,
But joy shall come with early light.

And thou, who, o'er thy friend's low bier,
Shed'st the bitter drops like rain,
Hope that a brighter, happier sphere
Will give them to thy arms again.

Nor let the good man's trust depart,
Though life its common gifts deny,—
Though with a pierced and bleeding heart,
And spurned of men he goes to die.

For God hath marked each sorrowing day,
And numbered every secret tear,
And heaven's long age of bliss shall pay,
For all his children suffer here.

Fire at Warsaw.

Warsaw has been singularly, unfortunate in being visited by destructive fires. About two years ago, two large hotels and some adjoining buildings, entailing a loss of $75,000, were burned. In January of the present year about $30,000 of business houses and dwelling were destroyed. About 12 o'clock on Friday night last, thirteen buildings including a church, some dwelling houses, a livery stable, &c. were eaten up the fire-fiend, destroying in the aggregate, about $50,000 worth of property. The fire originated in a livery stable. The supposed cause was spontaneous combustion. O. P. Jacques, proprietor of the livery stable, loses $6,000; insured in the Home of Columbus, for $500, Phœnix, of Brooklyn, $1,000. The following additional buildings, all situated on the same square, were totally destroyed; Wm. Conrad's brick dwelling, stables, and several thousand feet of dry lumber. Loss $10,000; insurance $3,000 in the Ætna and $1,000 in the Hartford. O. P. Musselman's law office and library, $1,200; no insurance. H. P. Berst's brick livery stables. Loss, $3,000; insurance, $2,000 in the Hartford of Connecticut.—A frame dwelling owed by the same. Loss $1,000; no insurance. The city engine house is damaged to the amount of about $1,000; no insurance. The Baptist church was burned. Loss $12,000; no insurance The burning of the edifice falls heavily upon the congregation, it being a new building and but recently unencumbered. W. S. Marshal's barn. Loss $3,000; insurance 1,000. G. W. Bennett's barn. Loss 500; no insurance. Richard Epper's private dwelling house. Loss about 5,000; no insurance. There was a southwest wind, which, in connection with a scarcity of water and an inferior quality of hose aided much in advansing the course of the element. The loss will fall heavily upon all the parties, and a number of hands will be thrown out of employment.

CHEESE MANUFACTORY.—I am now manufacturing cheese for the trade, and have on hand a large lot, which I warrant good, not made of skimmed milk. My cows are fed on tame grass, clover and timothy and fresh pure water—no stagnant swamp water on the farm. I use Roe's patent premium cheese vat with improved heater, the best in the world, also Roe's improved ever and weight cheese press, patent expansion hoops, &c. I am now selling at 1 and 14 cents per pound. Dairy one-fourth mile south of Auburn, on the Fort Wayne road.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All persons should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to one house in Fort Wayne this fall. Most goods and lowest prices.

Aug. 3.

For a long time there has existed a belief, founded upon Indian tradition, that a vein deposit of silver ore lay hidden in a cave in the southeastern part of Owen county. Several attemps have been made to penetrate the cave, but the entrance is blocked about fifteen feet from the outside by a heavy wall of sandstone which has been built across it. The entrance being narrow, and lined at top and sides with hard limestone the facilities for attacking the wall are limited. Some years ago an attempt was made to sink a shaft behind the wall, but it was abandoned for lack of means to continue the work. Mr. B. Schweitzer has recently leased the ground in which this wonderful cave is situated, and intends to go to work systematically to effect an entrance. He is an experienced miner, and it is expected that the hidden wealth of the mine, if any exists, will be speedily developed. The editor of the Owen County Journal has visited the locality, and from his observations seems to have considerble faith in the theory of a rich deposit of silver in the cave. The editor says:

"We shall not express an opinion from our knowledge of geology and mineralogy, but the old Indian camping ground, hieroglyphical marks pointing to the cave, the wall built across the parallel opening, which is of sandstone that must have been carried some distance, and the specimens of ore that have already been found, lead us to believe that Schweitzer will be richly rewarded for his enterprise in opening the cave. In our next issue we hope to be able to give a description of a silver mine, rivalling the richest of those in Mexico."

[illegible]

Iate country town, and during court week, I once rode on horseback at the end of a weary day passed in a continuous mud hole studded with stumps and ornamented [illegible] benighted [illegible] had already [illegible] in, and I was guided to the hotel by a thousand and one boys of the place, and the noise issuing from the barroom, not less disagreeable. I found the landlord shut up in a corner pen, dealing out liquid insanity to his customers. To my request for [illegible] ed that I [illegible] was not a bed unengaged or not occupied in the house. I persisted until wretch informed me that there was a "feller" in number six occupying a double bed, and I could "roll in there' if so minded.

It was dismal, but my only hope; so after the evening indigestion I climbed the rough stairs to number six. I was told by the landlord to walk in without knocking and did so.

It was a cheerless room, without carpet upon the [illegible] shut out the [illegible] that seemed [illegible] blindly in one, and wink as the candle flared the wind. I found my companion measuring off his dreams by snores, and undressing "rolled in," as [illegible] had suggested. My strange [illegible] over [illegible] something like a growl and a grunt, so I crept to his side.

Tired as I was, I could not sleep. The bed-tick felt as if it were stuffed with gr[illegible] the [illegible] were of the sort to slip up one's nose in the night, and be sneezed out some time during the day. Besides this, my bedfellow snored abominably. It sounded like a giant trying to blow "Old Hundred" th[illegible] without knowing [illegible] fiction as long as I could, and and at last gave my friend a dig in the ribs, exclaiming at the same time:

'I say."

'Hillo—ah—what is it?' he [illegible] in a confused way.

'I am sorry to disturb you, but I think it my duty to inform you that I walk in my sleep.'

'Well, walk.'

"My Christian [illegible] awrae that this is a free country, and if a man wishes to walk in his sleep there is no constitutional provision to prevent him. But I wish to re mark, you had better not interfere with me.'.

'Oh! walk; I don't say a word about it.'

'Well, don't. When addressed or interfered with, I am apt to get furious. I nearly brainied a poor man with a dog-iron the other night.'

'The deuce you did.'

Yes, I did.

'Well, that's rather disageeable. A fellow might, under an impulse, blurt out [illegible]'

'Better not.'

'No, I [illegible]'

A long pause followed this. At last the now-wide-awake lodger asked abruptly:

'Did you notice my hat on the floor?'

'I believe I did.'

'If you walk, you know, I'd rather you wouldn't step in it.'

'I'll bear that in mind.'

After another pause he again asked:

'Did you notice that door on the left?'

'I saw [illegible]'

'W[illegible] advise you not to go out there. It opens on a porch, only the porch hasn't been built, and it's twenty feet down into the stable-yard.'

'I don't beleive I shall walk out of that door.

'Don't think I would if I walked much.'

I supposed my inquesitive friend was dropping into a sleep, when he again broke out:

'I say, did you really brain a man with a dog-iron?'

'I tried pretty hard.'

Then came a silence that was not broken. After a little while I heard my bedfellow creeping softly from the other side of the bed. [illegible] feeling about for his hat and his clothes. Then I had the satisfaction [illegible] door had closed softly on my retreating tormentor. I rolled over and slept the sleep of innocence.

The next morning, on descending to breakfast I found and old friend seated at the table. We had not met for years. After a cordial greting I said:

'Are you sleeping here?'

'I have been trying; but I am nearly [illegible] on a [illegible] in the bar-room, amid a lot drunken brutes, who sang Bingo for wagers of drink all night?'

'Could you get no bed?'

'Yes, [illegible] a double bed to myself, when [illegible] crazy fellow, who walked and struck out with dog-irons.'

'G[illegible] you [illegible]'

'And hang you, Weston, you don't mean to say that you served me that trick?'

I [illegible] matic explanation.—Galaxy.

An Enoch Arden Case in Missouri.

The assertion that [illegible] stranger than fiction' is certainly illustrated in the following sketch, and we are indebted to J. C. Ryan, the agreeable first clerk of the steamer St. Luke, [illegible] principal items:

[illegible] the first year of the war J. M. Waldrup left his pleasant home in Central Missouri and shouldered his musket to fight, and to spill his blood, if necessary, in defense of young wife and [illegible] from that time until Sundry they never even heard from him.

Mr. Waldrup passed through the struggle safely, and was paroled in St. Louis in 1865. So soon as he could [illegible] home, and called on his neighbors. But his search was unsuccessful. The only information he received was that [illegible] child and gone to live with some relatives in Calloway County.

Visiting Calloway County, he obtained [illegible] settled down to ponder over the whereabouts of his [illegible] and child, and to earn money enough to continue the [illegible]

In the meantime Mrs. Waldrup had heard that her husband was dead, and had gone to live with a relation near Cedar City, opposite Jefferson City Missouri. Here she became acquainted with a well-to-do blacksmith whose name we have not learned. In due time they were married, and last week were living in their comfortable [illegible] Cedar City, and Mrs. Waldrup had blessed the blacksmith with three fine children, the eldest five years old.

Last Saturday Mr. Waldrup rode leisurely into Cedar City, and, halting [illegible] requested that worthy to shoe his horse. While conversing on the [illegible] crops, etc, the black smith learned Waldrup's story, and having heard his wife tell about her lost husband, surmised the truth and in his blunt honesty, invited [illegible] over to the house with him. The recognition was mutual, and the wife fainted in her first husband's arms. After the first agitation, Mr. Waldrup went back to the blacksmith shop, and the men talked the mater over sensibly and cooly, and agreed to allow the woman to decide as to which man she would [illegible]

After pondering the matter over in her mind, the doubly-mated lady decided to go with her first husband, on condition that the second allowed her to take the children [illegible] process of reasoning, inexplicable to us, he decided to give up his wife and children, [illegible] Mrs. Waldrup decided to St. Louis.

Yesterday the St. Luke stopped at the landing and Mr. W. came on board and engaged passage for himself and three children, and the blacksmith assisted his wife on board, and then brought on the children. Then came an affecting scene, that brought tears to the eyes of the captain, clerks and passengers. [illegible] first took one chi d and the the other [illegible] his [illegible] them passionately, while the tears rolled down his cheeks. Then he bade goodbye to his wife, who seemed deeply affected, and lastly [illegible] Waldrup. The two men gazed into each other's faces, shook hands long and earnestly, and then the blacksmith, by a strong effort of will, released the hand of Mr. Waldrup, and walked quietly ashore, never turning his face toward the [illegible] passed out of sight. [illegible] imagine the loneliness in that poor man's heart and home as he reached the room where he had so often sat with his wife and children.—St. Louis Dis

Necessary Rules for Sleep.

There is no fact more clearly established in the physiology of man than this, that the brain expends its energies and itself during the hours of wakefulness, and that these are repaired during sleep. If the recuperation does not equal the expenditure, the brain withers—this is insanity." Thus it is that, in early English history, persons who were condemned to death by being prevented from sleeping, always died raving maniacs; thus it is, also, that those who are starved to death become insane—the brain is not nourished, and they cannot sleep. The [illegible] 1st. Those who think most, who do most brain work, require the most sleep. 2d. The time "saved" from necessary sleep is infallibly destructive to mind, body and [illegible] children, your servants, give all tha are under you, the fullest amount of sleep they will take, by compelling them to go to bed at some regular, hour, and to raise in the [illegible] they wake; and within a fortnight, Nature, with almost the regularity of of the sun, will unloose the bonds of sleep the moment enough repose has be secured for the wants of the system. This is the only safe and efficient rule; and as to the question how much sleep any one requires, each must be a rule for himself—great Nature will never fail to write it out [illegible] under the regulation just given.—Scientific American.

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not [illegible] Rum, Whiskey, [illegible] Liquors doctored, [illegible] taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are [illegible] FIER and A [illegible] a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a [illegible] Tonic, possessing, also, the [illegible] of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, [illegible] ache, Pain in the Shoulders, [illegible] of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid [illegible] Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood [illegible] imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, [illegible] Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried [illegible] time by the use of these [illegible] cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same, size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk. Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

O Rose of [illegible]
Whose lips [illegible]
By night or by day-time,
[illegible]
With voices would [illegible]
Though [illegible]
Thy summer splendor,

What [illegible]
What bird that [illegible]
Than thine is [illegible]
Of beauty rare,
More perfect fairer,
O mystic Rose!

Thy warmth, [illegible]
Thy ruddy [illegible]

What [illegible]
What fresh [illegible]
What rich day [illegible]
O, deathly [illegible]
What suns, what thunder,
Gave thee their wonder,
What [illegible]
What clouds above!
Until thy sweetness
Of its completeness
Took earth to witness,
O Rose of [illegible]

[illegible]
Seem molten metals,
For on them settles
A cr'moon bloom:
[illegible]
With sunshine glowing
[illegible]
With warm perfume.
And Oh! each blossom
Upon each bosom!
Would any lose 'em,
[illegible] had found
[illegible] surrender,

Flexile, and round!

O Rose of Pleasure,

While time [illegible]

Chambers' Journal.

A Youthful Monstrosity.

(From the Jackson [Mich.] Citizen, Aug. 7.)

A warrant was sworn out yesterday before Justice Dyer, for the arrest of Ira Gavitt, of the town of Summit, for assault and battery upon William Henry Forbes, a boy whom he has employed upon his farm. The complaint alleged that Gavitt was wont to chain the boy up in a room, and otherwise misuse him. The warrant was placed in the hands of Policemen Pierson and Gilson, who proceeded to Summit and arrested Mr. Gavitt. Mr. Pierson went to the field to serve the warrant, while Mr. Gilson [illegible] who was supposed to have been tampered with on a previous occasion, he refusing to appear against Mr. Gavitt when a similar warrant had been issued.

While conversing with [illegible] Mrs. Gavitt, Mr. Gilson was informed by the latter that the boy was a natural born kleptomaniac, stealing everything that he could get his hands on, and that he possessed a very peculiar and strange appetite [illegible] watched, eating everything of an edible nature that he could get his hands on. To show his ability in this line, the boy was in the first place given two large apples, which he crunched up like a hog. Then came a raw egg, which he crushed in his mouth and swallowed, shell and all. Mrs. Gavitt then gave him [illegible] of bread and milk which he devoured. Mr. Gavitt came in with Mr. Pierson, at this point, and in compliance with the officers' request, prepared half a dozen raw eggs, which he ate in the same manner as an egg sucking dog [illegible] out of his mouth.—As a breathing spell, he took a large ear of corn, which was followed with a saucer full of sauce, several cucumbers, and a large slice of pork. The officers interfered and would not allow him to eat more. Mrs. Gravitt says that he eats all the raw meat he can get hold of, and that whenever a chicken was killed he would seize the fowl and suck the blood flowing from the neck. Two years ago, while killing a cow, Mr. Gavitt left the boy to watch the carcass while he was away for a little while. He returned in twenty minutes, and found that little Forbes had drank the blood entirely from the hole which had just been taken [illegible] the animal.

The boy and Mr. Gavitt were taken to the city, and brought before Justice Dyer, who bound [illegible] over to [illegible] to [illegible] boy asked Mr. Gilson to get him some raw meat. He procured him something over a pound, which he devoured as greedily as a vulture, and then asked for a couple of quarts of blood to wash it down. The officer said that he could not get any, but that he would have some for him to-day.

This forenoon the case came up, but was [illegible] until Tuesday on account of the unavoidable absence of and important witness. The boy informed us that he took home with him last night a lot of peanuts and half a peck of apples, which he devoured on the way. On arriving home Mr. Gavitt says he made way with six large ears of corn and two griddle-cakes the size of a No. 9 stove-hole. This entire exhibition took place between 12:30 and and 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Forbes [illegible] years old last April, although he does not appear to be more than 12. He is the son of a quadroon and a Scotchman. His mother is at present the wife of a negro named Pierce or Price, living in this city. He has not a single African feature, his hair being straight as an Indian's, and his eyes being blue. His features are screwed up into a peculiarly wolfish and hungry expression, which would cause one to look at him more than once. He is as intelligent as boys are usually at his age. He confesses to a passion for stealing, if he don't get caught. [illegible] the biggest meal the boy ever ate, and he informed us that while killing hogs once he devoured raw three belly pieces and large pints of fresh lard.

This monstrosity is evidently [illegible] Gavitt says that he shall endeavor to send the boy to Lansing, as he can do nothing with him. He is obliged to chain him up to protect his property, and [illegible] food on hand for his family. The boy, after having ate as much as he can hold, will stick his fingers down his throat, [illegible] it, and then keep on eating after the manner of a dog. Of a verity truth is sometimes stranger than fiction.

Caution for the Prevention of Accidents.

The following regulations should be engraved on the memories of all:

As most sudden deaths come by water, particular caution is therefore necessary in this vicinity.

Stand not near a tree, or any leaden spout, iron gate, or palisade, in time of lightning.

Lay loaded guns in safe places, and never imitate firing a gun in jest.

Never sleep near charcoal; if drowsy at any work where charcoal is used, take the fresh air.

When benumbed with cold beware of stepping out of doors; rub yourself if you have it in your power, with snow, and do not hastily approach the fire.

Beware of lamps.

Air vaults, by letting them remain open some time before you enter, or scattering powdered lime in them—Where a lighted candle will not burn, animal life cannot exist; it will be an excellent caution, therefore, before entering dark and confined places, to try this simple experiment.

Never leave saddle or draught horses, while in use, by themselves; nor go immediately behind a lead horse, he is apt to kick.

Ride not on footways.

Be wary of children, whether they are up or in bed; and particularly when they are near fire, an element with which they are very apt to amuse themselves.

Leave nothing poisonous open or accessible; and never omit to write the work 'POISON' in large letters upon it wherever it may be placed;

In walking the streets keep out of the line of the cellars, and never look one way and walk another.

Never throw pieces of orange peel or broken glass into the streets.

Never meddle with gun powder by candle light.

Never quit a room leaving the poker in the fire.

When the brass rod of the stair carpet becomes loose fasten it immediately.

In opening effervescing drinks, such as soda water, hold the cork in your hand.

Quit your house with care on a frosty morning.

Have your horse's shoes rough directly when there are indications of frost.

Keep lucifer matches in their cases, and never let them be strewed about.

Humorous Items.

A guest at a Western hotel, finding long hair in the butter, ordered the waiter to bring him some 'bald-headed butter.'

'Mr. Post-office-man, I want you to pay the postage on this letter.' 'Single or double?' 'Double, sir, I was married last week.'

A bare-headed, bare-footed little boy astonished a worshiping congregation in a Massachusetts town, on a recent Sunday, by rushing into a church and exclaiming, 'Where's my pa? The pigs are all out!'

A young miss, in a recitation in geography, informed her astonished teacher that 'the mammoth caravan in Kentucky is the greatest curosity, and has been exploded ten miles from its mouth.'

A correspondent of an agricultural paper asks: 'Where can wool be profitably grown?' We are of opinion that there is no place where it can more profitably be grown than on the back of a sheep.

A Terre Haute paper makes this interesting announcement: 'If the party who plays the accordeon in this vicinity at night will only change his tune occasionally, or let us know where he [illegible] when the engine [illegible] on, he will hear of something to his advantage.'

'You here, Jenkins! How the dace did you find your way out?'

'Find my way out! Out of where? What do you mean?'

"'Why, the last I saw of you, you were lost—in slumber.'

'Oh—ah; well, yes; I rode out, on the night-mare!'

The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph and Messenger tells the following: 'A colored loyal Benedict approached a gentleman of this city the other day, and said: 'Mass'r Wilkins, look me good in de face and tell me how much white man you think I is.' He was informed that he had possibly one-fourth of white blood in his veins—'Well sah,' said Sambo dat is all I want to know; case I had a daughter born to me lately, an' it's white as you is. Now I'se gwine to give my old woman three weeks to turn dat child black and if she don't do it, I quits her on de spot. I ain't no fool ef I is a niggah.'

"What is your business?" said the magistrate at a police court the other morning to a prisoner.

"I'm an observationist, your worship."

"An observationist! What is that?"

The Bravest Soldier at Waterloo.

A British officer has been favored with the following [illegible] of the Waterloo [illegible] A gentleman [illegible] waited on the Duke of Wellington at the Apsley House and told him that a friend of theirs had died, having [illegible] executors to his will in which, among other requests, he bequeathed five hundred pounds to the bravest man in the British army, and as they considered him to be the bravest man, they had called to hand over to him a check for the money.

"The Duke was much pleased at the compliment paid to him, but declined to receive the money, as he said there were many other men in the British army who equaled him in bravery. He was then requested to decide on whom the money should be bestowed. This was a difficult point; but at length he proposed it should be given to Maj. Gen. Sir James Macdonell, who so resolutely defended Hougoumont the key to the British position in the memorable battle of Waterloo.

"The two gentlemen then called on Maj. Gen. Macdonell, telling him the decision of the Duke of Wellington, and tendering him the five hundred pounds. But Sir James, in his turn declined to receive it, knowing, as he said, a man who, in the battle of Waterloo, had shown himself equal to any one in bravery. The Major-General then described when the French troops made one of their rushes at the gate of the farm house called Hougoumont. In that critical moment when victory and defeat hung evenly in the balance, Sergt. Maj. Fraser, a very powerful man, boldly assisted him to close the gates, thereby shutting out the French, who were soon after driven back with great slaughter. Thus was the fortune of the day decided.

"The Duke of Wellington considered Maj. Gen. Macdonell deserving of the money, on the account of his resolute defence of Hougoumont, and Sir James considered that Sergeant Major Fraser was entitled to share it with him on account of the great service he had rendered him on the occasion. The money was divided between the General and Sergeant-Major, and the generosity of the Duke of Wellington and Sir James Macdonell will not soon be forgotten."

An Indian Juggler.

While the tom-tom was beating and the pipe playing, the juggler singing all the time in low accents, smoothed a place in the gravel three or four yards before us. Having thus prepared a bed for the plant to grow in, he took a basket and placed it over the prepared place, covering it with a thin blanket. The man himself did not wear a thread of clothing, except strip around his loins. The time seemed now to have come for the deceiver's eye! So just as he was becoming more turbulent in his song, and while the tom-tom beat and the pipes shrilled more loudly, I stepped forward with dignity and begged him to bring the basket and its cover to us. He cheerfully complied, and I carefully examined the basket, which was made of open wicker-work. I then examined the cloth covering which was thin, almost transparent, and certainly had nothing concealed in it. [illegible] up his strip of clothing with such intensity that it was not possible it could have been touched without discovery, and bade him go on, feeling sure that the trick could not succeed. Sitting down he streched his naked arms under the basket, singing and smiling as he did so: then lifted the basket off the ground, and behold, a green plant about a foot high! Satisfied with our applause he went on with his incantations. After having [illegible] a little to give the plant time to grow, he again lifted the basket and the plant was now two feet high. He asked us to wait a little longer that we might taste the fruit, but on being assured, by those who had seen the trick performed before, that the result would be obtained, I confessed myself 'done,' without the slightest notion how. I examined the ground and found it was smooth and unturned. Apparently delighted with my surprise the juggler stood up laughing when one of his companions chucked a pebble to him, which he put into his mouth. Immediately the same companion walked backwards, drew forth a cord of silk, twenty yards or so in length, after which the juggler, with his hands behind his back, threw forth from his mouth two decanters stoppers, two shells, a spinning top, a stone and several other things, followed by a long jet of fire! If the wise reader regrets so much space being taken up by such a story, let him pass it on to the children, foolish as myself, who will be glad to read it.—Peep at the Far West, by Norman Macleod, D. D.

The other day a little shaver was expatiating on the injurious effect of tobacco. Said he: "The use of tobacco is so poisonous that a single drop of it put on the end of a dog's tail will kill a man in a minute."

TEACHER.—Well, what does l-a-s-s spell?

EXCHANGING RINGS.

Prudence Holmes sat alone in the [illegible] kitchen busily engaged in [illegible] over [illegible] Without, the golden sunshine of an August afternoon [illegible] the grass, fields and [illegible] that wound away to the village and touched with richer color the [illegible] geraniums, and zinnias in the the tiny garden, and the [illegible] Virginia creeper that climbed on and blossomed above the door. Prudence made a pretty picture as she sat on a low stool, [illegible] had soiled her little brown hands. She was a petite, daintily rounded maiden of eighteen, with great dark eyes, and glossy curls shading a fair brow, and cheeks that had a touch of wild-rose bloom upon them. The kitchen, too, made a pretty picture, with its well-scoured floor and dresser, its asparagus-topped clock, its shining stove, with bunches of herbs hung behind it, and the great bouquet of vivid cardinal-flowers set on the snowy table.

The kitchen was perfectly still, save the buzz of flies and the tick of the clock; and out side the crickets and the locusts alone disturbed the silence. Prudence believed that every one in the house was asleep but herself, and yawned somewhat wearily as she tossed over the berries, finishing the yawn with a bit of a soliloquy uttered half aloud:

'Oh dear! this having summer boarders isn't very nice!'

'Miss Prudence,' said a voice in the door-way, so suddenly that Prudence nearly upset her berries in her surprise.

'Oh Mr. Wentworth, is it you!' she said, bashfully, bending down to pick up a few berries that had rolled from her apron.

'I'll pick 'em up!' exclaimed the new-comer—a tall and rather aristocratic-looking youthful twenty-one, with merry blue eyes, and short auburn hair curling closely under a straw hat—diving for the missing berries with ungraceful dexterity. 'Yes, it is I, of course. Have you forgotten your promise to go after lilies with me this afternoon?'

'Oh, but I didn't say this afternoon you know; only some afternoon this week,' responded Prudence, demurely.

'Well, we'll call it this afternoon, won't we?' was the persuasive rejoinder, as the straw hat was tossed on a chair.

'I can't; I've got these berries to pick over.'

'I'll help you. Lend me half that apron, and we'll have them done in a trice.'

'But I shall have supper to get. Mother's away, and there are biscuits to make,' insisted Prudence, turning her face away to hide a smile that would curve her lips.

'Never mind that,' responded Mr. Abbott Wentworth, bringing a chair to her side. 'Tea's at six, isn't it? and it's only half past two. We'll be back by five, without fail, and have time to get half the lilies in the river;' and he began to assort a handful of berries with much earnestness.

'W-e-ll,' assented Prudence, after a pause for consideration and a glance at the clock—'I can go for a little while, perhaps. Oh, don't stain your coat, Mr. Wentworth.'

But Mr. Wentworth was sublimely indifferent to his coat, and worked with such good-will that the berries were soon picked over, and Prudence and himself on their way down to the river. Five minutes later Prudence, with her draperies daintily [illegible] around her, was seated in the stern of a little boat, which, propelled by Mr. Wentworth's practised hands, shot swiftly down stream.

Although Mr. Wentworth said to Prudence five times within one hour that it was a lovely day, and although Prudence assented every time, I hardly think they appreciated the beauty around them, for Prudence was quite absorbed with the lilies and the reflections in the water, and Mr. Wentworth looked more at his companion than at the aspects of nature. They had gathered enough lilies to satisfy them, and Prudence was leaning [illegible] and idly trailing one hand in the water when she suddenly uttered a little scream, and sat erect, while cheeks from which the color had been frightened.

'Oh, I almost lost! How careless I am!' she exclaimed, replacing an old fashioned ring, set with a tiny circle of rubies, on her finger.

'Did the water wash it off your hand?'

'I suppose so. It's too large for me. I'm always losing it and finding it again. I wouldn't lose it entirely for the world, because it used to be grandmother's. She gave it to me.'

'What a curious old ring it is!' said Mr. Wentworth, with interest. 'May I look at it? Don't trouble yourself to take it off,' he added, drawing in his oars and leaning toward his companion.

Prudence allowed her tiny brown hand to lie in his aristocratic white one a moment, then coquettishly withdrew it.

'Isn't it pretty?' she inquired, archly.

'Very pretty. Shall I tell you how to guard against losing it in future?'

'Oh yes, if you please.'

'[illegible] little hand [illegible] guard it, or, better yet, exchange with me. Give me yours, and take this instead,' said the young man, daringly.

Provoking Prudence [illegible] heavily chased gold ring he held out to her, and then looked back at the water with an innocent [illegible]

'Oh! I don't think it would fit.'

'Try it,' suggested her companion, softly.

Prudence shook her head, but finally agreed, blushingly, that it would do no harm to try, and slipped the ring on her forefinger.

'It's a perfect fit,' cried Mr. Wentworth, delightedly. 'Nothing could be better. Why, Miss Prudence, you surely don't mean to give it back?'

'Of course I do,' was the ready rejoinder. 'Why not?'

'Because,' said Mr. Wentworth, speaking very earnestly, and disregarding his oars altogether, while he tried to get a glimpse of the face hidden by the flat hat—'because I meant to ask you—'

'Oh, Mr. Wentworth,' cried his listener here, 'do see that lily on your left! Won't you get it for me?'

'I'll get you that and twenty others if you'll listen to me first. Do you care for me, Prudence? Will you marry me?'

Prudence's face was turned away, and her head bent lower. A crimson flush stole over ear, neck, and chin.

'Prudence?'

No answer. Her companion leaned over and took her hand again venturously.

'Prudence, will you wear the ring?' he questioned softly.

But the hand was hastily drawn away, a pair of saucy black eyes flashed into his own, and Prudence's merry laugh rang over the water.

'I'd rather have grandma's please. I ought to go home, Mr. Wentworth, for I know it's almost tea-time.'

Mr. Wentworth put his ring in his pocket, and took up the oars again energetically without a word. He was fresh from college, and had held the stroke oar in many a race, but he never made better time than he made that after noon in rowing up the river. The light boat shot along, and the rower's brows were knitted and his teeth set. Not once did he look at Prudence, who sat in half-alarmed silence, now and then stealing sidewise glances at the offended young Hercules from under her hat.

Mr. Wentworth drew a breath of relief when the boat at last grated on the sand, and, having assisted Prudence to land, and curtly offered to carry her lilies, he shouldered the oars and marched grimly toward the house by her side. Prudence, somewhat bewildered and more angry, made no effort to break the silence, and studiously endeavored to keep from crying. When he at last left her at the door with a curt 'Thank you, Miss Prudence,' and departed to carry the oars to the barn, it was well he did not look back, for Miss Prudence tossed the lilies aside with a petulant gesture, and had a fit of crying, with her head on the kitchen table.

When Mr. Wentworth returned from the barn half an hour later he did see a picture that comforted him a little through the honeysuckle pantry window. It was Prudence, with her sleeves pinned up moulding biscuits with desperate haste, while the tears fell thickly on her [illegible] This picture [illegible] Mr. Wentworth that he [illegible] hastily taking a [illegible] brush to obscure it, and lingered so long that he was late at tea.

That he was a model supper-table. There was the great dish of berries, with snowy cream beside, flanked by cheese and raspberry jam. There were two mountainous plates of snowy biscuits, contrasting with the golden sponge-cake and the richer gold of butter. Mr. Wentworth, who had supposed he should never have an appetite again, felt quite revived by the sight of this table and the memory of the picture. The rest of the boarders seemed to share the sensation, for the group of muslin and broadcloth was very hilarious, and the [illegible] disappeared rapidly. Prudence, presiding between the tea-pots, seemed rather out of spirits; but Farmer Holmes atoned for her silence by unusual jollity.

When the biscuits were passed a second time to Mr. Wentworth he saw that only one was left, and would have refused decorously, but the hospitable farmer pressed it upon him.

'Don't be afraid of it. There's plenty more in the kitchen—ain't there, Prudence?'

Thus urged, Mr. Wentworth accepted the biscuit, and Prudence disappeared to replenish the plate. Mr. Wentworth divided the biscuit, then dropped it suddenly, with an exclamation that brought every eye upon him. There, imbedded in the light, white biscuit, lay Prudence's ring.

Such a shout of laughter arose that it brought Prudence back from the kitchen in haste, just in time to see Mr. Wentworth coolly remove the ring from the biscuit, rinse the dainty circle, and drop it in his waistcoat pocket, 'to be kept till called for,' he said, with a significant glance at her scarlet face.

Poor Prudence! there was no peace for her after that. An array of jokes quite overwhelmed her protestations and disclaimings, and she was thankful to beat a retreat to the kitchen when the meal was over. [illegible] there she was pursued by a [illegible] of hilarity, and [illegible] until the last dish was put away, and she had escaped her [illegible] with the excuse that she was to go to the village [illegible] Instead of going to the village, however, she stole along the hedge, climbed the wall, and ran to the farthest end of the orchard, where she flung herself on the ground, and cried as if her heart would break.

She had [illegible] hour before a step [illegible] the dry grass at her side [illegible] and the very voice she most dreaded to hear said:

'I've come to return your ring, Miss Prudence.'

Poor little Prudence [illegible] and took the [illegible] ring. 'Thank you' [illegible] did for that [illegible]

'You [illegible] I should have brought it before, but I couldn't find you. I [illegible] about those [illegible] dignifiedly.

'N-no,' responded Prudence, miserably, between her sobs. 'I—I thought you'd think I did it on purpose.'

'How could I have thought so? It was a mere accident my getting that particular biscuit. I'm very sorry you've been so annoyed in this way. I'm going away to-morrow, Miss Prudence.'

The sobs partially ceased, and Prudence said, bitterly, 'Are you?'

'Won't you bid me good-by?'

Prudence said, 'Good-by,' unsteadily, but did not raise her head.

'You will shake hands, won't you, Miss Prudence?'

No answer.

'I can't go away while you are offended with me. Won't you at least tell me why you are crying?'

'Because I—I lost my grandmother's ring,' sobbed Prudence, making a great effort for composure.

Mr. Wentworth laughed in spite of himself.

'Why, it's safe on your finger, and not a bit the worse for its baking,' he [illegible]

'But there is. I shall never have another happy moment if I've offended you,' said Mr. Wentworth, [illegible] 'I was a brute to treat you as I did this afternoon; but I'm going away, and I shan't annoy you again. Won't you forgive me now, and shake hands?'

Another long silence. Mr. Wentworth turned away in despair, but was detained by a faltering voice.

'I—I'll forgive you, if—'

'Well?' was the breathless interruption.

'You—won't—go—away.'

The most observant [illegible] at breakfast the next morning saw that Mr. Abbott Wentworth wore the ring he had found in the biscuit on the little finger of his left hand, and that Prudence wore a heavily chased gold circle in the place of her lost [illegible] To use the words of one of the aforenamed boarders, 'That tells the whole story.'

Auditor's Office

The Courier.
[illegible] & STAR
AUBURN, IND., SEPT. 14 1871

The Eel River Road.

We give below the address of Hon. [illegible], delivered at [illegible] opening of the road, which we find in the Wabash Republican of last week.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—

I know you will feel seriously disappointed at the announcement that Judge Petit, who was to have addressed you on this occasion, is absent. At the urgent solicitation of your committee [illegible] take his place and address you briefly that the exercises of the day may proceed as nearly as possible according to the printed programme.

We come not here on this occasion to weep with those who weep, but to rejoice with those who rejoice. And we do this with the greater pleasure from the consciousness that you rejoice in the accomplishment of that which [illegible]

[illegible] in this day be argued [illegible] intelligent audience that rail roads are of permanent value to any country through which they run. One need but visit towns and communities through which they run, and compare the life and prosperity evident there, with the general dullness and Rip Van Winkle drowsiness of towns and communities where the sound of steam whistle is never heard, to be convinced of this. But I will specify a few of the benefits the building of this road will secure to you.

It will bring you near a market for your produce. Instead of hauling your wheat fourteen to twenty miles to market on the Wabash as heretofore, and often over bad roads, you will now have a market equally good I presume as to price, within from one to five five miles of you, and over roads generally good. This will be money to you in the saving of both labor and expenses. In other words your wheat at home will be enhanced in value by the building of this road from six to ten cents on the bushel. And what is true of your wheat, will prove equally true of your corn, hogs and whatever else you may have for market. But it brings your merchants also nearer market and enables them to get their goods here at less expense than formerly, and to sell you proportionately less. Thus the building of this road will bring money to both your pockets, and you should therefore rejoice.

It will prove a further benefit in [illegible] a market [illegible] for many articles of your farms production, heretofore worth nothing in any market you could reach with them. Witness your flax straw for example. Anticipating the building of your road, your flax mill was built, and an article, till this year, of little or no value, is now worth at your doors thousands of dollars to this community. And what is true of flax straw will prove equally true of scores of [illegible]

[illegible]

"CHEAP HUMAN LABOR."—I despise the word. It signifies a crime and a shame. It signifies squalor, degradation, ignorance and vice. Are not laborers men—our fellow men? They have bodies to clothe, and stomachs to feed, and minds to educate and spirits to elevate, and old age to provide for. They have homes which they love, and wives whom they cherish, and children whom they hope to make worthy citizens—the honest fathers and virtuous mothers of a succeeding generation. And can you remember these duties and see these aspirations; can you contemplate the patient hopefulness and cheerful and contented, because fairly compensated industry, and talk of cheap labor. Labor is to cheap now. Labor does not receive its just reward.—Geo. H. Pendleton.

The California Election.

The New York Journal of Commerce an independent paper, not only in name but in fact and edited with marked ability, makes the following comments upon the result of the California election:

"There is nothing in the outcome of the California elections to excite special interest this side of the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Booth (Republican) owes his good fortune more to his own unobjectionable character and personal popularity, and to Governor Haight's [illegible] reputation [illegible] to any thing in the platform on which he stood. Except that the Republican platform sustained President Grant's administration and the Democratic one opposed it, there was not much difference between the two. To the liberal mind they were equally bad in their contemptuous treatment of the Chinese. No party should boast much of a success won by truckling to a rabble of stone-throwers such as murdered a poor Chinaman in the San Francisco streets the other day. The democrats in succumbing to that spirit of rowdyism deserved defeat, but it is a matter of regret that they were whipped by a party no better than the Democracy in that particular. [illegible] the Democrats would probably have improved their chances [illegible] not nominated Governor Haight, but [illegible] well known [illegible] Governor four years [illegible] nominated. [illegible] Haight [illegible] again. [illegible] numerous [illegible] Democrats, from the opening of the campaign down to election day, have produced the consequences which intelligent observers outside of the State predicted from the first. It is said that the Central Pacific Railroad, which [illegible] with the Republicans and contributed materially to carry the election."

Horrible Slaughter of Human Lives.

A frightful accident occurred on Saturday night on the Eastern Railroad at Revere, seven miles from Boston. The accommodation train started behind time, and while stopping at the station at Revere, the lightning express overtook it and telescoped it, killing [illegible] passengers outright, of whom three were scalded, and their limbs fractured. Nine of the wounded have since died.

Another railroad accident occurred on Saturday morning on the Phil'a & Erie R. R., the westward bound mail collided with a freight train near Westford Station. The conductor and engineer of the mail train neglected to obey orders and thereby caused the collision. Six persons were killed and about fifteen wounded.

The excursion boat "Ocean Wave" exploded near New York on Monday. Two hundred passengers were on board, eighty of whom were killed and wounded, many of the [illegible] so horribly scalded that they cannot survive.

GREELEY AT CHICAGO.

The Hon. Horace Greeley took the train at Lafayette, Indiana, this morning at two o'clock, arrived in Chicago in time for breakfast. He was received by the Hon. John Wentworth and the Hon. John B. Grinnell, ex-Representative from Iowa, and conveyed to the Tremont House in a carriage. The gentlemen gave Mr. Greeley an elaborate breakfast. Their welcome to Mr. Greeley was very cordial, and the conversation which these three distinguished [illegible]

The gentlemen looked upon Mr. Greeley as a probable candidate for the Presidency, and congratulated [illegible] upon the likelihood of the nomination.

Mr. Wentworth said, "Grant has not the shadow of a chance for even the nomination." Mr. Wentworth adds that throughout the West and particularly in Illinois, there is a quiet feeling of contempt for the nepotism that can not be overcome.

"Both Senators, Trumbull and Logan, are openly and avowedly Grant's enemies, the latter particularly so.

"General Logan says that his whole influence shall be directed to prevent Grant's renomination."

Mr. Grinnell said he could promise the State of Iowa for Mr. Greeley, [illegible] he would allow his name to go to the Convention.

At this Mr. Greeley smiled complacently, and said [illegible] So far as he was concerned, it was of no account whether Grant was nominated or not, but practically he was opposed to the nomination. Mr. Greeley added, "If we nominate Grant we shall certainly be defeated. The public will stand no more horse-jockey and present-taking Presidents. We have had enough of them. I tell you, gentlemen, we must take a new departure, and I can assure you that we of the East are determined that it shall be done. I have been rather quiet about it so far, but I want everybody now to understand what I think. When we take hold of Grant it will not be with silk gloves on our hands. It has got to be done. We must throw Grant overboard, or we shall be defeated."

"But," said Mr. Grinnell, as though asking for information, "what would you have us do, Mr. Greeley? Suppose we throw Grant over, what can we do? You know our people don't want to jump out of the frying pan into the fire. Now, if you will give us the slightest hope that you will allow us to put your own name forward, we would willingly throw over Grant."

[illegible] Mr. Greeley [illegible] will continue to give [illegible] the end of his term. Besides I want to nominate a man who, if elected, will elevate the office to where it was in former days—a man who will not take presents, or [illegible] his office holders to advance his own aspirations for a second term, and who in the meantime neglect the interest of those whose ruler he is. Besides, I want a man who is above mere pleasure hunting, a man who will not dawdle away one-fourth of his term amid the follies and frivolities of a watering place, and one who, when called upon for an expression of his views on political and other subjects of national interest, can give them in clear and comprehensive language. That's the kind of man the people want, [illegible]

"I want you, gentlemen, to tell your people [illegible] that we are [illegible] Grant [illegible] We will not [illegible] but to use his own words, we are going to fight it out on this line."

Mr. Wentworth seemed delighted at this expression of Mr. Greeley's views, and promised that he would circulate them far and wide, wherever it was necessary.

"Nip it in the Bud."

[illegible]

[illegible] poses. In this campaign we are fighting a brave battle for Governor, State officers, United States Senator, [illegible] Congressmen [illegible] and a Democratic candidate for President of the United States from Ohio; for just as certain as we carry the State this fall will an Ohio Democrat head the national ticket next year. That is universally conceded. Is this a time for quarrels over county offices and back [illegible] intrigues with the white and [illegible] The question is [illegible] the duty of Democrats to close up the ranks to work for results instead of recruiting the enemy. [illegible] chronic grumbler or bolter, comes around with whines in his mouth and thirty pieces of silver in his pocket, send him to the right about double quick.

There is another row among the Republicans of Wisconsin. The Federal office holders there are accused of being disturbers of the peace. The feud in Alabama between the Federal office holders and the rest of the party is in full blast. The situation in Louisiana is certainly not happy. The presence of United States bayonets at a Republican convention does not look healthy. There is a profound feud in Pennsylvania, and Cameron is as helpless as Borie. There is a disturbance in Massachusetts. Missouri and New York have been thrown away. Half a dozen Southern States are thoroughly in power of the Democracy. And still feeble minded persons are telling us that the Republican party has no alternative but to run the Grant family for all offices now in their possession. So says the Cincinnati Commercial.

The highest farm in the United States is on the Union Pacific railroad and is eight thousand feet above the sea level. It raises good vegetables and grain crops.

[illegible] ture."

Senator Thurman, of Ohio, delivered a speech at Columbus recently, from which we take the following extract, referring to the so-called "new departure." He says:

"Now, my friends, it has been common for the Republican party of this country to say that the Democrats have taken a new departure, and that new departure, they allege, consists in saying that we have been wrong and the Republicans [illegible] there has never been [illegible] to that. We are as much opposed to what has been done [illegible] another in [illegible] unlawful and brutal manner, [illegible] street, throttle him and knock him down, and trespass upon his right, [illegible] I should see his wounds and see him bleeding, I should be compelled to say that he was down and bleeding, but who would call that an admission that the villain who knocked him down had done what was right? [Laughter.] So when these men changed the constitution and invaded the peace of the country, [illegible] they made the south [illegible] in the midst of [illegible] remonstrated and opposed [illegible] and now, because we cannot deny that they have done it, because we cannot deny that the thing has been accomplished: because we are compelled to admit the fact that the reconstruction laws have been executed and the amendments to the constitution fastened upon us, we are told forsooth, that we admit that the Radicals were right and we were wrong. [illegible] the fourteenth amendment to the constitution was passed. We opposed it. Why did we oppose it? Because it provided that all people in the United States should be equal before the law? There is not one Democrat from the Ohio river to Canada, not one in the United States, opposed it upon any such grounds. That has always been the law in Ohio; that has always been the law in all the northern states. The Democrats, he said, opposed the fourteenth amendment, first because of its disfranchisement clause; because it disfranchised the men of influence, of ability, of education, whose aid was necessary to restore peace to the south. Secondly, because the language was ambiguous, and was such as to enable an ambitious president and congress to usurp the power that belongs to the individual states, and to overthrow every one of the reserved rights of the people of the States, and were we not right? For is it not under the ambiguous and loose language of that amendment that the infamous Ku-Klux bill was passed, under a pretence of authority derived from that loose and ambiguous language? If this interpretation were correct, the President would have power in the State of Ohio, to dispose of the Governor, dethrone the legislature, turn out of office our judges and establish martial law from one end of the state to the other, whenever he thinks or pretends to think it is necessary for him to take martial possession of Ohio in order to protect the rights of individuals. We were right then opposing that amendment thus framed and thus phrased.

The fifteenth amendment we opposed because, first, it was a fraud upon the people, in the way that the thing was proposed and carried out, and a direct violation of the solemn pledge of the dominant party made in their platform at Chicago. We opposed it for [illegible] reasons than that. We said [illegible] of the Southern States in the control of [illegible] could read, [illegible] and of whom not one in a thousand had the least idea of the government under which he lived, and under which they [illegible] to discharge the duties of [illegible] the time should come when they should be educated up to a [illegible] intelligence, and [illegible] of the country, [illegible] Now what has been the effect [illegible] with their [illegible] they are the most [illegible] part of God's globe this day. These states have been [illegible] to the tender mercies of the carpet-baggers and adventurers of the north, [illegible] the scalawags of the south, and by combination with the negro, they govern almost every one of those states, and how do they govern them? When the war ended these states were prostrated to a degree we can hardly realize, ravaged by their own armies as well as ours. The people were prostrated, the currency was worth nothing; thousands and tens of thousands of their farms lay desolate under the scourge of the war; they were ruined in fortune, humbled and prostrated in spirit. That was a time when it behooved us to take them by the hand and help them up. Just at that time the Republican party, these carpet-baggers and scalawags, took hold of the government in these states.

As to the thirteenth amendment, abolishing slavery, Senator Thurman said they had never made any objection to it, and that no man could point to any act of the Democracy in the northern states that ever approved slavery.

A special dispatch from Fort Wayne states that at Wabash, Indiana, about eleven o'clock Sunday, a lady went to the cell in the jail where Mrs. Finley, the murderess of her three children, was confined. She found her lying on her back on the floor, with a frightful gash in her throat, and covered with blood. She had attempted to cut her throat with a piece of [illegible] she had broken. She had taken a piece of it and had cut her throat, and when found was trying to push the glass into the wound and widen the gash with her hand. She had partially severed the windpipe. An alarm was given, and the sheriff was soon on hand, but had to call for assistance before he could get the glass from her. They then had to tie her [illegible] before her wound could be dressed. The physicians do not think she will survive her injuries long.

A boy, five years old, is described on the Jersey City police docket as "an habitual drunkard."

[illegible] Citizens.

From the Mexican frontier of Texas we receive accounts that reveal a most extraordinary state of affairs, that calls for the immediate intervention of our Government.

Along the line of the Rio Grande, and for some miles back, are located the stock ranches of some of the enterprising citizens of the State. Owing to the poverty of the soil and the consequent larger ranges required for the immense herds of cattle owned [illegible] and the [illegible] widely separated to afford the moral support given by numbers. Predatory [illegible] frequently taken advantage of this circumstance [illegible] Grande, and drive off the cattle by hundreds to their own side of the river. During the last few months the number thus stolen has averaged over four hundred a week, and this, too, in the limited region lying between Laredo and Brownsville only a hundred and twenty miles in length. It is asserted that in some instances these bands have been accompanied by armed Mexican soldiers. Frequent conflicts are reported as having taken place between the owners and the robbers, attended with the killing or wounding of the parties engaged.

But the worst feature in the case remains to be told. Tamaulipas and Nuevo Leon, the Mexican States immediately opposite the region spoken of, and in which these expeditions originate, are practically under the government of one Cortina, a military chief recognized by the Mexican Government as one of its trusted agent. This man is fiercely and universally accused by the Texan people of having in most cases not only organized these raids, but also of having shared in in the booty. Stolen horses and beef cattle have been traced to some of his numerous camps. Thieves found with the stock in their possession, and imprisoned by the Alcades, have been released by Cortina and permitted to go unpunished. Remonstrance with the Mexican civil authorities has resulted in silence only, or the open admission that they are powerless against the robbers. Appeals have been made to Washington, but so far attended with no satisfactory result, and the indignant people loudly curse the Government, which they aver is either indifferent to their sufferings or too weak to protect them.

Under an efficient Administration, conducted by men of culture sufficient to appreciate the wants of the people they affect to govern and guard, [illegible] have been [illegible] to the Rio Grande, to [illegible] up and down the river, and put an effective stop to this plundering, disgraceful alike to the Mexican Government that winks at it, and to the Mexican Government of the United States, too indifferent to its honor to resent it.—New York Sun.

The Noble Revenge.

The coffin was a plain one—a poor, miserable pine coffin. No flowers on the top, no lining of white satin for the pale brow; no smooth ribbons about the coarse shroud. The brown hair was laid decently back, but there was no crimped cap with neat tie beneath the chin. The sufferer from cruel poverty smiled in her sleep; she had found bread, rest, and health.

"I want to see mother," sobbed a poor little child, as the undertaker screwed down the top.

"You cannot; get out of the way, boy—why don't somebody take the brat?"

"Only let me see her one minute!" cried the helpless orphan, clutching the side of the charity box, and as he gazed into the rough box, agonized tears streamed down the cheeks, on which the childish bloom ever lingered. Oh, it was painful to hear him cry the words:

"Only once; let me see mother only once."

Quickly and brutally the hard-hearted monster struck the boy away, so that he reeled with the blow. For a moment the boy stood panting with grief and rage—his blue eyes distended, his lips sprang apart, a fire glittering through his tears, as he raised his arm, with a most unchildish accent, and screamed, "When I'm a man I'll kill you for that!"

There was a coffin and a heap of earth between the mother and the poor forsaken child—a monument much stronger than granite, built in the boy's heart to the memory of the heartless deed.

The court house was crowded to suffocation.

"Does any one appear as this man's counsel?" asked the judge.

There was a silence when he had finished, until, with lips tightly pressed together, a look of strange intelligence blended with haughty reserve upon his handsome features, a young man stepped forward with a firm tread and kindly eye to plead for the erring and friendless. He was a stranger, but at the first sentence there was silence. The splendor of his genius entranced—convinced.

The man who could not find a friend was acquitted.

"May God bless you, sir, I cannot," said he.

"I want no thanks," replied the stranger.

"I—I—I believe you are unknown to me."

"Yes, I will refresh your memory. Twenty years ago this day, you struck a broken-hearted little boy away from his dead mother's coffin. I was that boy."

The man turned livid.

"Have you rescued me, then, to take my life?"

"No, I have a sweeter revenge. I have saved the life of a man whose brutal deed has rankled in my breast for the last twenty years. Go, then, and remember the tears of a friendless child."

The man bowed his head in shame, and went from the presence of magnanimity as grand to him as incomprehensible.

We seldom pick up a country paper now-a-days that does not contain a reference to horse stealing operations in some part of the State. The business appears [illegible] than at any period for many years past.

It is always [illegible]

Recovering.—We learn that Mrs. H. W. Ford, who has suffered [illegible] for several [illegible] with cancer [illegible], is, after two operations [illegible] recovering, and that now she enjoys almost as good health as before the attack of the disease. Her many friends will be rejoiced to hear of her speedy recovery and [illegible]

Newville [illegible] a railroad [illegible] thriving country town. It is nicely located in the most fertile part of our county, valley of the St Joe, and even without the [illegible] of the outer world, is building up some substantial buildings, a [illegible] of which would be of no disgrace [illegible] hope, however, this [illegible] will be soon supplied.

Incorrigible.—One of our [illegible] brought a [illegible] week, [illegible] He then tried his hand at securing a customer for another load, but was unsuccessful. [illegible] "No," was his reply, "I'll see them rot first."

C. C. Shaffer, Esq., our popular furniture dealer, has purchased the large stock of furniture recently opened out by J. S. [illegible], and this in connection with the complete establishment which Mr. C. has been running will make a fine display in this line of goods. Those [illegible] not do better than to call on Mr. Shaffer, where they will have the advantage of a large [illegible] from which to select.

Peter Schaaf, a German residing near Hoover's Brick Yard, committed suicide on Friday morning of last week, by cutting his throat. He had made his home with his niece for sometime, but since her marriage had not agreed happily with her husband,—indeed had once tried to shoot him. This is the only cause suggested for the rash deed. Before the tragedy he burned up all his effects including about $1100 in cash and notes. He was 65 years [illegible]

New School House.—Our friends of Waterloo, are going to build a fine brick edifice for school purposes. We hope they will succeed in putting up a first-class structure, one that will be a credit to the county as well as the town. These edifices are taken generally as an index of the prosperity and enterprise of the community in which they are located, and a very correct one, they are, too. Success neighbors in your undertaking. Its estimated cost is $20,000.

Terms Cash.—Our popular grocery dealers, Messrs. Smith & Hare have abandoned the old practice of trusting out their goods, [illegible] for cash only. This is the only proper way of doing business, and customers will find it much to their advantage. It ought be the rule with every business, and we hope that others will speedily adopt it, so remember when you go to Smith & Hare's take your money with you, as the cash system will be strictly adhered to.

Ague, what is it? Here's the latest definition: [illegible] an isotychose fovilla which is the immorigerous outgrowth of a demulcent periflege. Now when this permeates the protoplastic [illegible] and vibrates in isothermal lines against the mephitic diapason, the retiary consequence is, of course, a vigesimal [illegible] Action, which sets in motion the [illegible], and a shake is the result.

Serious Run-away.—As the family of Peter Miser was leaving town last Saturday, for their home, in a wagon, the horses became frightened at a sack on a fence about three miles from town, and became unmanagable, breaking the lines which were held by [illegible], a son of Mr. Miser. The sufferers are getting along very well, con[illegible] their injuries.

State Fair.—We are under obligations to Hon. I. D. G. Nelson, of Allen County, for a complimentary to the State Fair.—[illegible] fare [illegible] will be issued at all stations along the line of the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R., in this State, to [illegible] from [illegible] here on the morning train you arrive in Indianapolis at 4 in the afternoon, or taking the night train you get there at 6:30 in the morning. This being the first chance for the people in this section, getting to the State Fair in a comfortable manner, we presume there will be a large attendance from this part of the State.

New and Important Route to Cincinnati.

The Fort Wayne, Muncie & Cincinnati Railroad now runs to Cincinnati, two express trains daily, leaving Fort Wayne at 11 o'clock every morning, Sunday excluded, and every night, Sunday excepted. These trains run through without change over the White Water Valley road, and in to the Plum Street depot, which is situated in the very heart of the city. Returning from Cincinnati a train leaves every morning at 7 o'clock except Sunday. Another feature is that these trains run directly from Cincinnati to Jackson Mich. and [illegible]. Connections are made at Cincinnati with the Baltimore and Ohio, and other roads centering there, and at Jackson with the Michigan Central and Saginaw roads. The train leaving Fort Wayne at 11 o'clock a. m. lands passengers in Indianapolis at 4:30 the same afternoon, except Sunday, and the train leaving the city at 10 p. m. delivers passengers at Indianapolis at 6:30 every morning except Monday.

The traveling public will rejoice at this excellent arrangement, which cannot but accommodate them in every particular. Our Fort Wayne people can now leave there Saturday night, spend Sunday in Cincinnati, and return Sunday night. To those who would like to spend Sunday in Cincinnati, and return Sunday night. To those who would like to spend Sunday along the line of the Muncie Road, the train leaving Fort Wayne at 11 o'clock Sunday morning will accommodate them, and return them Sunday night. All passenger trains now leave Fort Wayne from Bloomingdale depot, so that no more delays will be experienced [illegible] often the case at the Wabash depot.

The ticket office in the Sentinel building is kept open every night until 10 o'clock, [illegible] every Sunday morning from 9 till 11.—Ft Wayne Sentinel.

Sunday School Pic-nic Near Newville.

[illegible] the northern part of the county took place last Saturday, near Newville, in Waterloo's Grove. The attendance was very large and the occasion [illegible]. The weather could not have been more [illegible] on the other hand, entered heart and soul into the festivities, to which they had looked forward with the liveliest anticipations.

The grove was a beautiful one, and the happy assemblage with its music and banners presented a most pleasant spectacle, which will long be remembered by [illegible]

The exercises opened by music from the Butler Brass Band, [illegible] good one, followed by a song [illegible] Then Rev. R. B. Powell, Chaplain of the occasion, [illegible] which filled the bill [illegible] who was pleased to designate them as "short, sharp and shiny." We were glad to notice that the first was specially observed throughout, a feature that contributed largely to the comfort of the audience—well, we don't mean that exactly either—but there were [illegible] speakers and had they extended their remarks, many would certainly have become wearied before all had their say. That's the idea we wish to convey. Each speaker seemed to be equal to the emergency, and [illegible] pithy remarks, that exactly suited the occasion. We doubt whether a similar number of divines will ever again equal the good judgment and discretion, the excellent taste and brevity, and withal say as much in as few words, as our friends did last Saturday.

Between the remarks came those soul stirring songs by the various schools present, and we would find it difficult work to award a premium to any particular one so well did they all perform their part.—The Brass Band came in for its share in the programme, and the music discoursed [illegible] to the [illegible]

[illegible] looked over the vast throng, and saw a number of beautiful banners, suggestive of the taste of the different schools. The Butler Sabbath School had a handsome star banner, with the words, "Jesus Loves Us" on one side, and the name of the school on the other.

The "Newville Christain Sunday School" were the next words that attracted our attention, which were surmounted [illegible] the opposite side proclaiming that "Truth Will Prevail."

The largest, perhaps, was that of the Milford Sunday School, on which was inscribed "We Trust in God."

The Big Run Sabbath School was duly represented by a neat little banner, bearing their name.

The Stafford and Wilmington Schools also had their banner on the outer wall.

Another banner bore the beautiful sentiment, "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy Youth," which furnished a text for one of the speakers, who made [illegible] eloquent address.

[illegible] handsome banner was carried by the U. B. School of Newville. It represented a shield tastefully mounted on which was the appropriate inscription "God is Our Shield." In [illegible] Saml. Wannemaker, Bowersock and Shafer, participated in the exercises in regular order, alternating with the songs of the children, and the programme was thus made an attractive and pleasing one.—About the middle of the exercises a recess was given for refreshments, and a rush [illegible] St. Joe, [illegible], to discuss this important feature of the Pic-nic. We met with the usual courtesies and were [illegible] grove, for which we tender our thanks.

A marshal band called the refreshed pic-nickers together and the remainder of the programme [illegible]. Our attention was called to several [illegible] under the superintendency of a young lady in Newville, [illegible] is the most flourishing in the county and reflects great credit upon the zeal and energy of this young lady.

Soldiers' Reunion.

This proposed by [illegible] soldiers of the counties of Allen, Noble, Whitley, Kosciusko, DeKalb, LaGrange, Elkhart, and Steuben, comprising the old 10th Congressional District, to have a general meeting and greeting—either in this city or at some accessible point, within the next three months. Some of the counties named already [illegible] desirable [illegible] District organization be made, in order that old friends of the camp and field be brought together occasionally, for mutual recreation and good fellowship. Allen county already has an organization, and the members of the 129th have met annually for the past three years—the last time at Kendallville, two weeks ago.

A committee has been appointed from the 129th, to consult with the the commanding officers [illegible] in regard to the proposed reunion. The District Regiments comprise the following: The 12th, 30th, 44th, 74th, 100th, 129th, 142th and 152th, Infantry; the 12th Cavalry, and [illegible] Batteries. These, together with [illegible] raised in the district, which were afterward added to other regiments, are expected to join in the movement, and assist in effecting [illegible]

The committee referred to consists of the following gentlemen:

Col. C. A. Zollinger,
Col. Solomon DeLong,
Lieut. A. [illegible]

Col. Zollinger, of this city has taken hold of the matter zealously, and is earnestly laboring to bring together all the boys who participated in the battles for the preservation of the Union, and who are now entitled to [illegible] which a grateful country will be glad to crown them with. Any communications to him, [illegible] committee, will be promptly attended to, and suggestions will be considered and subsequently laid before a Committee of the whole for final action.

Our Town Board.—We hear considerable talking about the action of the Town Board, in the case of the petition for the opening of an alley in rear of the brick [illegible] and good common sense upon the part of some of the members thereof. We do not bring this up as a political matter, and do not make a personal charge against any member, merely giving the expressed opinions of Republicans as well as Democrats. The fact is, very little has been accomplished by this Board and the [illegible] already being far spent, our citizens have a right to know the cause of their inactivity. Many improvements are needed in and about the place, yet we have not been cognizant of anything being accomplished of a public nature. We learn that a committee was appointed by this Board to assess the benefits and damages accruing from the opening of this alley, and that said committee duly discharged their duty and made their report, which was received and approved. But by a little lobbying or some other mysterious power, the Board turned right around and rejected the whole thing. In order to explain this contradiction away there is likely to be a disruption between the [illegible] in regard to the records. It is about time that we see the tangible results of their labors for the people [illegible] growing impatient over the delay. We bring this matter up in no manner of malice toward the Board, the individual members of which we hold as our personal friends. Let us have the benefit of your councils.

We visited [illegible] popular Commissioner, Wm Richmond, Esq., at his handsome country residence north of Newville, last Saturday, on our return from the pic-nic. [illegible] one of the best farms in the county, containing over 400 acres with improvements in the way of buildings [illegible] found in the State. Mr. R. has a farm of as many acres, several miles below. He stands, perhaps, at the head of the long list of successful farmers having [illegible] county 30 years ago, a poor man. He has done more for this county, as a farmer, than any other one [illegible] about six hundred acres, raised from 5000 to 6000 bushels of grain each year, and put the products in improvements on his land. Well he deserves a comfortable home with plenty around him. His amiable lady is the only [illegible] that deserves to share in the [illegible] of [illegible] tions for special favors at their hands.

The [illegible] comes again after an absence of several months. We clip the following from the last issue:

"Business was excellent last week. Friday and Saturday [illegible] Large amounts of produce were bought, some of which was stored in rooms about town for lack of room at the station."

Death of Little Nell.

[illegible] ever appealed directly to the better feelings of human nature as Dickens. None ever described the death of children, whom he loved supremely, with such consummate touches of beauty. No more [illegible]ing story was ever told than that of little Paul Dombey, unless possibly it be [illegible] noble Little Nell, in the Old Curiosity Shop; and as long as English literature endures, will these be [illegible] land, with swelling hearts and overflowing eyes.

She w[illegible]

She was dead. Dear, gen[illegible] dead. Her [illegible] a poor slight thing the pressure of a finger would have crushed, was stirring nimbly in its cage, and the strong heart of its child mistress was mute and motionless forever! Where were the traces of her early cares, her sufferings and fatigues? All gone. Sorrow was dead indeed in her, but peace and perfect happiness were born, imaged in her tranquil beauty and profound repose.

And still, her former self lay there, unaltered in this change. Yes! the old fireside had smiled upon that same sweet face; it had passed like a dream through the haunts of misery and care; at the door of the poor schoolmaster on the summer evening, before the furnace fire upon the cold, wet night, at the still bedside of the dying boy, there had been the same mild and lovely look. So shall we know the angels in their majesty after death.

The old man held one languid arm in his breast for warmth. It was the hand she had stretched out to him with her last smile—the hand that had led him on through all their wanderings. Ever and anon he pressed it to his lips; then hugged it to his breast again, murmuring that it was warmer now; and as he said it, he looked in agony to those who stood around, as if imploring them to help her. She was dead, and past all help, or need of help. The ancient rooms she had seemed to fill with life even while her own was waning fast, the garden she had tended, the eyes she had gladdened, the noiseless haunts of many a thoughtless hour as it were but yesterday, could know her no more.

"It is not," said the schoolmaster, as he bent down to kiss her on the cheek, and gave his tears free vent, "it is not in this world that Heaven's justice ends. Think what it is, compared with the world to which her young spirit has winged its early flight, and say, if one deliberate wish, expressed in solemn terms above this bed, could call her back to life, which of us would utter it?"

She had been dead two days. They were all about at the time, knowing that the end was drawing on. She died soon after daybreak. They could tell by what she faintly uttered in her dreams that they were of journeyings with the old man; they were of no painful scenes, but of those who had [illegible] with great fervor.

Waking she never wandered in her mind but once, and that was at beautiful music, which, she said, was in the air. God knows. It may have been. Opening her eyes at last, from a very quiet sleep, she begged that they would kiss her once again. That done, she turned to the old man, with a lovely smile upon her face, they said as they had never seen, and could never forget, and clung with both her arms, about his neck. She had never murmured or complained; but with a quiet mind, and manner quite unaltered, save that she every day became more earnest and more grateful to them, faded like the light upon a summers evening.

Along the [illegible] her now, pure as the newly fallen snow that covered it, whose day on earth had been so fleeting. Under the porch where she had sat, when heaven in its mercy brought her to that peaceful spot, she passed again, and the old church received her in its quiet shade.

Mark Twain's Nag.

[illegible] by the name of Jericho. He is a mare. I have seen remarkable horses, before, but none so remarkable as this. I wanted a horse that would shy, and this fills the bill. I had an idea that shying indicated spirit. If I was correct, I have got the most spirited horse on earth. He shys at everything he comes to with the utmost impartiality. He appears to have a mortal dread of telegraph poles especially, and it is fortunate that these are on both sides of the road, because as it is now I never fall off twice in succession on the same side. If I fell on the same side it would get monotonous after a while. The creature shied at every thing he has seen to-day, except a hay stack. He walked up to that with an intrepidity that was astonishing. And it would fill any one with admiration to see how he preserved his [illegible] in the presence of a barley sack. This dare-devil bravery will be the death of this horse some day. He is not particularly fast, but I think he will get me through the Holy Land. He has only one fault. His tail has been chopped off, or else he has set down on it too hard some time or other, and he has to fight flies with his heels. This is all very well, but when he tries to kick a fly off the top of his head with his hind foot it is too much of variety. He is a going to get himself into trouble some day. He reaches around and bites my legs too. I do not care particularly about this, only I do not like to see a horse too sociable.

YOUTHFUL minds, like the plastic wax, are susceptible of the most lasting impressions; and the good or evil bias they then receive is rarely ever eradicated.

Miscellaneous Items.

A Minnesota Juror addressed a note to the Judge, in which he styled him an "honorable jug."

The full and final returns of the census of 1870 give the total population of the United States at 38,555,983.

Dexter gets $378,000 worth of horse flesh. At least, he has paid that amount for the contents of his stables. Rather a [illegible] all is—dog meat.

[illegible] which was firmly refused.

They have a new term of reproach for negroes in Memphis. They are called rusty mackerel, etc., as the case may be.

At Cambridge, Mass., last week, the lightning struck the house of a lightning rod maker, just to show its impartiality.

Among the other luxuries lying around loose in Nevada, are arsenic springs. They will be [illegible] popular with unhappy families, when regularly opened as a fashionable summer resort.

A fourteen-year-old boy in Iowa has made a complete sewing machine from pasteboards and wires. It is said to make perfect stitches. He did it with his little jack-knife.

It took ten men a whole day to cut a sycamore tree in Pease township, Belmont county O., one day last month. The tree was twenty-five feet in circumference and solid wood.

A gentleman of California relates that he picked up two dead water snakes which had partially swallowing each other. Each snake had commenced swallowing the other's tail, and they continued the operation until their heads met.

Peaches are a drudge in the market in Delaware this season. The crop is so large that prices have declined to most unprofitable figures, and great quantities are rotting on the hands of the orchardist or [illegible].

Some people are never happy, no matter what happen. They had a shower of granite, about enough to pave the streets, the other day in Norfolk, and now they are praying that the next fall may be build[illegible] dressed.

During the siege of Paris 63 balloons left that city. Of these, five fell into the hands of the Germans, two were lost at sea, and one landed in Norway after crossing the North Sea and sailing about 1,000 miles in 45 hours. Besides the 64 aeronauts whom the 64 balloons conveyed out of Paris, they took 91 passengers, 3' 4 carrier pigeons, and about 3,000,000 letters, besides numerous dispatches.

California's latest curiosity is a rooster with two set of legs, one on his back.—When he is weary of standing in his natural position, it is gravely asserted, he turns a somersault and walks off up side down, and when he takes a notion he [illegible]ly turns over so as to swallow it more easily. But it is in a free fight that he shows to greatest advantage. He is a terrible fighter, and when thus diverted him self, looks like a revolving wheel, turning somersaults incessantly, and kicking in every direction.

State and County Fairs.

One of the best indications of healthful progress of the country is the marked and enthusiastic interest taken by all classes in the State and County agricultural and horticultural fairs. These associations have grown so numerous that almost every considerable community has its own, while the State organizations concentrate the most valuable portions of all. A most laudable and useful end is subserved by bringing samples of productions of all kinds together for comparison and inspection. It is an honorable spirit of emulation that competes for supremacy in a field where the [illegible] of [illegible] importance than the prize bestowed. Not only are samples of [illegible] of all kinds brought together, but the merits of each, and the advantages of new varieties, are practically discussed. More has [illegible] to spread varieties of fruit over the West than by any other process. The effect of climate in modifying agricultural productions, and the special adaptation of soils to particular classes of vegetation, are matters [illegible] and were it not for these [illegible] would be generally totally overlooked.

Agricultural papers are doing a great work in this way, but a single demonstration goes further in satisfying the mind than any amount of reading and theorizing, valuable as that may be. The improvement in breed of stock resulting from these exhibitions has probably proved of even more value to public interests than in vegetable productions, but the whole combined result already achieved can scarcely be estimated. In this department of machinery a standard is ordinarily furnished by which to measure the advances of each year; and, to the intelligent mind nothing can be more encouraging than these gains in useful mechanism. Inventors are moving the world, and the crude creations of one season foreshadow the triumph of the next. Without public fairs each of these worthy and most useful men would have to rely on his own personal efforts to bring new devices to the attention of the public. Finally, and by no means the least pleasant feature, a fair is the farmer's holiday; a social gathering, exciting and [illegible] where neighbors and friends, long separated and far apart, meet, discuss and compare successes and failures, and gather of each other the ripe fruits experience. It is greatly to be hoped that these civilizing agencies will be adopted that no county, community or State will be without them. The attendance upon them should be universal.

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS

J. Walker, Proprietor. R. H. McDonald & Co., Druggists and Gen. Agents, San Francisco, Cal., and 32 Commerce street, N. Y.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

By [illegible]

The boy stood on the burning deck,
There ain't any doubt;
And yet who saw him on the wreck?
Who really heard him shout?

Would he have stood and roasted there
With jolly-boats so near,
And [illegible] about his [illegible]
Nor walked off on his ear?

What wonder standing there [illegible]
So beautiful and bright?
Who couldn't while around him beamed
That lovely Titian light?

His pow-wow with his father I
Regard as tempting fate;
If he declined to early die
[illegible]

'Pa, can't you speak—a little piece?
Just try a sneeze or cough.
My [illegible] kin, kin you release?
Oh say, yes, father, off!'

And while his father slept below
The boy, he never stirred;
One of a 'race' who never 'go'
Unless they 'get the word.'

He called aloud, 'Am I allowed
Your leave to leave? Your son
Stands fire, you know, but don't you crowd
The thing; I'm toasted done.

'Of course [illegible]
If you [illegible]
I burn with [illegible]
You know how 'tis yourself.

'Speak, father, I would be released!
I [illegible] your loving lesson.'
He knew not that his pa, deceased,
Had gone to Davy Jones.

Upon his brow he felt the heat,
Yet stood serene and calm,
With only now and then a bleat,
Like [illegible]

The [illegible] burn and snap
All in the wildest way;
Not e'en a shroud was left the chap,
And he the only stay.

[illegible] thunder-peal—
Good gracious!—Pretty soon
Boy, ship and anchor, flag and keel
Went up in a balloon!

And when this sound burst o'er the tide,
The boy! oh where was he?
Ask of the winds, or none beside Stayed long enough to see

[illegible]
[illegible]
The [illegible]
Was that young sailor muff.

Now, boys, don't take a cent of stock
In Cas-a-bi-an-ca;
The [illegible] knock.

Josh Billings Interviewed.

My old friend Josh Billings arrived yesterday, and it [illegible] got away from the Clarendon to have a good square old religious talk with him. To be frank, I'm sick of being aristocratic. Josh Billings is a hass, and I like to be with him. He had just finished another book, and Carleton won't publish it. He's afraid his old customers will get it and laugh themselves to death. Josh and I adjourned over to an old room at Congress Hall, and we had a long talk about the infallibility of the church, our old friends Artemus Ward, John Phœnix, Mark Twain, and Mr. Shillaber. Josh is as young and as fresh as he was twenty years ago. His hair hangs in a [illegible] over his shirt collar. It is sprinkled with gray, but the old fire is up in his eye. I asked him a good many questions, and I give you his answers.—Like General Sherman he answers as short and quick as a streak of chain lightning. He handed me a Partaga [illegible] commenced:

'Mr. Billings, where were you educated?'

'Pordunk, Pennsylvania.'

'How old are you?'

'I was born one hundred and fifty years old, and have been growing young ever since.'

'Are you married?'

'Once.'

'How many children have you?'

'Doublets.'

'What did you come to Saratoga for?'

'I kant tell. Kin you?'

'What other vices have you?'

'None.'

'Have you any virtues?'

'Several.'

'What are they?'

'I left them in New York.'

'Do you gamble?'

'When I feel good.'

'What is your profession?'

'Agriculture and alminaxing.'

'What do you think of an interviewer?'

'He's a little worse than an organ grinder.'

'How do you account for your deficient knowledge in spelling?'

'Bad spelling during infancy, and poor memory.'

'What things are you the most liable to forget?'

'Sermons and debts.'

'What profession do you like best?'

'Auctioneering, base ball and theology.'

'Do you smoke?'

'Thank you, I'll take a Partaga first.'

'What is your worst habit?'

'The coat I got last in Poughkeepsie.'

'What do you think of Grant?'

'I am in favor of the present administration.'

'What are your favorite books?'

'My alminack and a pocket book.'

'What is your favorite piece of sculpture?'

'The mill stone nearest home.'

'What is your favorite animal?'

'The mule.'

'Why?'

'Because he never blunders with his heels.'

'What was the best thing said by our old friend Artemas Ward?'

'All the pretty girls in Utah marry young.'

'What do you think of the San Domingo question?'

'If it don't interfere with the Santa Crutz (rum) question I'm in favor of it.'

'What do you think of the Indian question?'

'I think all good Injuns die young.'

'Do you believe in the final salvation of all men?'

'I do—let me pick the men!'

The dinner hour now arrived, and we adjourned to a special course of woodcock and black bass, furnished in a private room in Congress Hall. After dinner Josh reviewed my interview, and pronounced it faithfully rendered. He wished to add only that Mr. Appleton, who publishes his alminax, has one of the most immense intellects of this or any other century. [illegible] on Saturday, when I will send you the dinner epigram.

THE ENGINEER'S STORY.

BY MARGRET H. HAMMOND.

A FACT—Every word of it.

Now you know, Jack, it isn't an easy thing to drag the skeleton out of one's closet for others to stare at, but for these last three years you have been the best of friends to me, and you must have often thought what a glum, moody dog I was; and so I am, for that matter, for I've enough to think of, God knows, to make me shut my mouth forever, and go down in the dust like the leper, crying "Unclean, unclean!" And yet, Christ healed the leper, and there's a chance for the vilest of us.

This memory is a terrible thing. If we could only forget at times. But no; a bad deed once done is there, and not all the repentance and tears in the world can undo it.

I was always a wild, frolicsome boy; my poor old mother couldn't manage me very well—no father, you see—and mother a gentle, weakly body.

I hardly know how I did come to have such a bad name in the neighborhood. I didn't mean to be so bad, but I was brimfull of spirits, and more mischeivous than most of the boys. But somehow or other all my failings were set down to ugly wickedness, and I was blamed, and cursed, and pointed at, until the little good there was in me seemed to sour, and I began to believe, as they all told me, I was going straight to the devil.

Mother, she wanted me to make a scholar, but really, I couldn't get along in school. It was no use in trying. When the new teacher came to the Academy, McCallum was his name, it seems as if they couldn't wait, and let me have a fair chance, but some of them had been beforehand, warning him what a hard case I was, and telling him I ought to be put out. So there I was! My character all gone, you might say, and he ready to suspicion and punish me for every thing that went wrong. And it seemed a hopeless task for me to fight my way up hill as long as every one was ready and eager to give me a push to the bottom again.

So I thought I'd pull up stakes and run away from home. It was all wrong, you see, Jack, but I was a hot-headed youngster, and I thought if I once got away where folks couldn't say anything against me, I'd start fair and square.

But mother! I declare, Jack, I never felt so cut up as I did that night I left her. She was a pretty, mild-looking woman, with soft, blue eyes, and whitish hair combed low on her cheek; and that night, with the pinkish glow of the fire flickering on her face, and her white cap with its frills and strings, she looked younger and prettier, and she coaxed two or three times at the supper-table, when she'd press the food on me so kindly, "Do eat some of these doughnuts, sonny," she said, "I fried them a purpose for you;" which I knew already, seeing she never ate any herself. And then I came near breaking down, and I pretended to cough, and out of doors to clear my throat. I can remember to this day how every thing looked that night when I went out into the kitchen garden behind the house. It was just below the hill, and all the way up were patches of pines and cedars, with great gray rocks cropping out here and there, and the moon was shining in a cold, ghostly way, and the wind soughing drearily in the trees. Every thing looked [illegible], and my heart was [illegible] a lump of lead in my bosom.

Well, I went for all that. And seeing as how I left her alone there, sitting by the fire, her hands folded in her lap, and a loving smile on her face. Seeing as how I did this, with never a word or sign to let her know I was going, you'll call me a brute; and I was one—I, her only child, and she a widow!

But I was paid well for it, for I never fell in with any one the least bit fonder of me after that. Bless you no! I was a [illegible] freckle-faced boy, whom nobody cared for, and I found out in good earnest that this is a cold, selfish world. You may not think so when you're a niche in it, snug, warm and sheltered, when there are those to whom your coming brings joy, and going gives pain; but when you're alone and you look out on happy homes with never a place for you—when you see others loved, and not the slightest love for you, and no one caring whether you live or die, then, Jack, you feel just how wide and cold and empty the world is.

"Why didn't I go back to my mother?"

Well, Jack, I did go back. You see, it was [illegible] after I ran away, and all that time my conscience, for I hadn't lost it quite, pricked me hard.

I could see her daily, with that bit of a gray curl on her forehead, and I could see her going round the house, doing up all the chores, and then at nightfall I could imagine her sitting all alone by herself, a watching, waiting and praying, till at last I couldn't stand it longer, and I says, "I will go home to mother." I had worked steadily all the while, and I'd managed to save enough out of my earnings to buy her a nice dress for a peace offering. It was something soft black stuff, and I thought, with that on, and with her white cap, and her white kerchief folded on her breast, she'd look as nice as any lady in the land. All the way home the longing to see her grew on me—to kiss her soft wrinkled cheek, to be good to, and tender of her, because of the cruel pain I had given her.

I felt weak and shaky when I came in sight of home once more. It was a chilly, windy night. There was just the least glimmer of a moon, and the headlands looked misty and threatening. I was that nervous, I could hardly find the clasp of the gate, and as I stood fumbling for it, a bat swooped past me, and brushed its clammy wings in my face.

There was a light in the parlor—the little cosy parlor. Mother was there waiting! I stole softly to the window and looked in. The shade was drawn up a little, and I could see two candles burning on the high mantle-piece, two old women crouching below it, but no mother there. She must be in the kitchen!

I went with a bound around to the back door. I'd catch her in my arms and kiss away her glad, sudden tears. The door was unfastened. There was no light within, and the cat brushed against me, mewing piteously. I rushed in the parlor, and the old women cried out sharpely, in a sudden fright. "Where's mother?" I cried.

They started at me as if stupefied; they mumbled together in their Dutch tongue. "A-c-h" one spoke at last, pointing to the recess.

There used to be a bed behind those curtains. Was mother sick?

I pulled them aside with impetuous haste, and there—was a coffin!

God! I can speak of it now, Jack, but I can never forget the shock that closed for an instant my pulses—sent dizziness to my brain.

Yes, she was there. The thin, worn face with the beauty of Death on it, a calm smile on the poor lips, stilled forever.

Alone! That one truth crushed me then with its awful power. Death had taken from me my only friend. She slept.

Between me and the forgiveness I craved, yawned the grave. All her true, unselfish love burned itself on my heart then, all the sorrow I had given her.

"She be dead and gone," whined Aunt Lois, "not all yer cries kin wake her, bless the Lord. And may you feel your ingratitude and be cut to the heart, for, 'tis a judgment."

And this was sympathy! I deserved no better. And yet no poor, homeless dog ever craved a word or look of kindness more than I did then. I was heart-broken. God's creatures could have bound and led me then with cords of love.

I went away from the old place for good after that. No one left behind now to watch and pray for me. The worn hands and feet were quiet now in the graveyard. I had only a memory left.

This world is a tough place, and there's none who know it better than those who have to fight it single-handed, as I did. I don't [illegible] smoother path, but the years of [illegible] ways, and the being jostled and thrown about from pillar to post, didn't go far towards making me better. If people would only be kinder to the poor and friendless, if they'd look on them as having souls and feeling, it seems to me that it would make a millennium on earth; but there, we are all selfish, and "me and mine" is the thing uppermost in all our hearts. It's human nature.

I got on the cars after a while, and you may imagine my companions were [illegible] rough, rollicking set, fearing neither God, man, or the devil—to whom [illegible] food and raiment and animal pleasure—nothing more. I don't think I had one associate who feared God, or strove to keep his commandments.

Any one might well tremble for themselves when they walk in the path I did; but I was too far gone to tremble in those days. I was conscious only of the actual life I was leading, day after day. No one to care for me, and the old mother lying yonder in her eternal sleep.

So I tried to believe them. Death was annihilation. Beyond the grave—eternal darkness. And yet I wasn't satisfied thinking this. Old memories and old truths I had learned would come into my head sometimes, especially nights when it was dark and lonesome, and I'd get thinking of her and the love she bore me, and then it seemed as if I couldn't have lost her so utterly—that love, her love, couldn't die—as if the God and the Heaven she had loved and believed in, must be real. And then I'd cry out and gnash my teeth and wish I had never been born—never!

Then, when the day would come again, and there'd be all that light and bustle, and plenty to take one's mind, I'd be myself again, and work and curse and drink the same as ever.

Bye and bye they made me Engineer. "76" was my engine, and she was the trimmest, prettiest little engine on the road. [illegible] you knew how much I got to thinking of that insensate thing of iron and brass. Well, I ran her for a long time, and I really seemed to be getting along, until I found I'd been crowding down steam and sitting on the valve—I had walked on a caster-crust, and now I was a slave to my thirst for liquor.

You see, Jack, when you're thrown in with fellows continually asking you to take a drink or stand treat, when the grogshop is always handy, and a homeless being meets a welcome there at all hours, and when he never hears a prayer or whispered "Lead us not into temptation—Deliver us from evil," then, what's to be expected, but that he's on the down-grade and will rush along full steam on, till it's all over with him?

God's creatures are fools with sin. Needn't tell me there's no such thing as total depravity. I say we're full of it. I've seen it exemplified too often. I've been among the [illegible], Jack, and if all all our [illegible] beat us in wickedness, I'll not open my lips again.

Well, I found myself a hard drinker. I walked into it gradually. I was seldom beastly drunk or lying in the gutter, but bye and bye I found I was no longer my own master—[illegible] I had lost the power of taking only such a quantity—that the cursed thing had mastered me.

God! what was I become? I had dreamed once when I was a sunny-haired [illegible] would be a man, [illegible], honored. [illegible] was the dream of long ago.

Now what was I? An animal, nothing more; my soul clogged, my body misused, hopes and chances in life going, and nothing, it seemed, to hold me back from eternal ruin.

Let me see;—it was in the fall of fifty-nine. We were running a great many trains then on our road, and we hands were kept pretty busy.

The Seventy-Six made a great many trips then, and never an accident had happened to her yet.

"Tom Brown is the best engineer on the road;" so I heard Mosby, the President of the road, says one day.

I was standing close at hand, and my spirits went up at that. It's human nature to be pleased with honest praise; and I had generally tried to be very careful, though lately I had gone on my engine so muddled, that I hardly knew what I was about, and several times found myself asleep before I knew it.

You say, Jack, "it is a cursed sin for a man in such a position to be in liquor." So it is. If ever men want clear minds and steady brains, it is when they're intrusted with the lives of their fellow beings. I may have felt this in a dim sort of way at times, but then, there was that intolerable thirst within me, and I was in hell if I didn't keep myself soaked, and conscience drugged.

Well, where was I? Oh, that night I heard Mosby praising me. I got on my engine then, a sober man, and we ran down to Dennis very swiftly. Before we got to Dennis, though, they found one of the wheels of the rear car was afire and burning so hotly, they were afraid it would set the floor afire too. So we had to stop in Dennis a matter of some twenty minutes.

The Seventy-Six was oiled and tended to, and then Sam Venner lounged up to me as I stood waiting.

"It's a cursed shame, Tom, to be standing around so. There is Hallet's across the track; come over and take a warmer; you'll need it. It's cold and stormy—the night is going to be awful!"

I pretended not to hear him, for I hadn't the courage to say No! So I bent down and looked sharply at one of the screws.

Ted Saunders, the fireman, a wild, roystering fellow, yet handsome as a picture with his blue eyes and yellow hair, came whistling up.

"Yes, Tom, come over; damn the wheel! It's nobody knows how long t'll keep us waiting, so I'm going over to Hallett's. Just drink around, boys."

I looked around. The air was chilly and damp; a dash of rain beat now and then into our faces; great clouds were scurrying across the sky; it was going to be a bad night.

Secretly I was a little afraid to get the taste of the damnable stuff. There were ten passenger cars behind us. Mosby's praises were yet in my ears.

An old woman crossed the track just before me then, her scant dress clinging closely to her damp limbs. Something in her face, as the light fell on it, made me think of my mother, and there flashed across my mind an old saying she had so often told me: "When sinners entice thee consent thou not." That, or at least the idea, if not the words.

"I won't go, mother," I says softly.

"Are you going?" cries Sam.

"Come, Tom, don't go back on us," laughed Ted.

Then they crossed over.

"Brown!" called the voice of the conductor, Mac Springer, "There's no starting within fifteen minutes; it's too bad, as we'll have to make up for it, for there's the express at Erie, and we've got to be in on time."

Then he turned, and I saw his short figure trotting down the track.

I went slowly over to Hallett's. It was warm and bright in there; a row of corpulent bottles filled the window and through the glass door I saw Sam and Ted.

I went in. There was a spicy smell in the little room. Hallett turned his rubicund face to me. "Something hot to-night Brown?"

"Yes," says Ted. "I'll stand treat [illegible]."

I had a thought of turning and fleeing; and then, all of a sudden my appetite mastered me and it was all over—I was lost!

I tossed off the liquor with a steady hand.

"Now I'll stand treat, my boys," and this time we drank and laughed and joked loudly.

"Now it's my turn," said Ted, leaning unsteadily against the counter. "I've just made up my mind, boys, to let this be my last drink; think I'll try the sober track awhile. You see I've got a sister—she don't like it pretty well. Come, fellows, take a last, stiff horn with me. Here's to this night's trip of the old Seventy-Six."

Well, Jack, it's the sad sober truth—we went out of Hallet's thoroughly drunk.

"Be—be a good boy—look out steady," said Ted with an oath.

[illegible] enough to [illegible] place—to hold my tongue. There was the [illegible]

"Brown!" called Mac Springer to me from alongside, "Start her off, in a second, and be careful; we'll have to run [illegible] miles an hour, now—we are half an hour behind, and it's a terrible night."

Then he hurried down the wet platform. I started her off with a great cry, and we shot off into the night. The streets had a dismal, soaked look where the lamps flickered on them. Hardly any body was out; and bye and bye houses, and forms were shadows, gone into darkness; we were out of town and tearing along like mad. The shrieking, fire-belching engine, throbbing onward, out in the night stretching ever blacker and colder around us—on—on—between solitary stretches of moorlands and through gloomy mountain defiles.

I seemed to be a part of the engine as she panted and heaved onward like some great beast. This was such a wild, exhilirating rushing through space, with the driving storm and the howling winds.

I sang snatches of ribald songs; I laughed and shouted in my drunken mirth; I made the Seventy-Six yell fiercely as a train of cars rushed past us like glaring fiends; and then things grew shattered and strange, and the night and the storm and the engine itself began to be like a dream, vague and far off. And then I went dead drunk asleep, and through the storm and the darkness the engine dashed on with its hollow thud, and no human eye there to ward off danger!

There! there Jack, when I think of it now I'm sick with pain; it's ten years ago, yet I can't bear to go back to the memory of that night now.

How long we whirled on I can't tell; but bye and bye there was an awful shock—a rushing—there was hot water and sizzings, and blackness, and driving rain, and lurid gleams; and cries and groans and wailings that meant death and despair.

And I found myself lying down in the soft ooze like a log, pinned down, and groaning mechanically "God Almighty—God Almighty."

And then I thought I was in hell, mayhap, and I looked down to where there was a strange jumble of wood and wrecks and flashing lights, with black forms and livid faces peopling the mist; and I thought this hot terror was the gulf of brimstone;

Some broad, dark figure came beside me, swinging low a lantern, so the light came full in my face.

"Why, it's Brown," said a sudden, sharp voice—Mac Springer's voice. "For God's sake, man, how did this happen? We're sheer off the bank—two of the cars are nothing but wrecks. Heavens! this is an awful night's work! And the dead and wounded! Speak, man, speak!"

My brain was on fire. I wanted to raise my pinioned hands and clutch my throat until I died. This was my work! My work, yes, mine!

I did not speak or move—the blood in my veins was curdled—there was a hell of remorse in my soul.

Mac Springer went on—came to a black form lying just above me. There was blood there—a pool of it—and it wasn't a living, but something cold and still.

"Ted, Ted!" called the voice, and then the old conductor rose up from sharply scanning brawny figure. "He's stone dead! One word, Brown, let me understand how this happened."

And then I wrenched with my awful burden of guilt, all my words choked in my throat, I never stirred.

Everything after that seems wrapped in a black cloud. I have a shadowy recollection of a great crowd of mangled, stark forms on stretchers—of cries, and sobs, and prayers.

Then there were terrible dreams and fancies haunting me, and there was always the whistling of an engine in my ears, and I could hear its steady throb as I rushed away from a ghastly pursuing crowd of dead men and women. I saw Ted too. He came to me, a drabble of blood on his forehead, and his eyes wide open with a burning, awful terror in them, and he says, "That was my last drink, Tom. Woe, woe! There's place for you in hell. Don't fail me—don't fail me—don't repent!"

And then I saw mother, and her face had the sad, sweet smile it wore, when I saw her in her coffin, and she spoke and said "Repent, repent, there is always forgiveness."

I have a confused idea of a bar-room, of being forced down into a seat and always springing from it—of seeing Mac Springer there, and Sam Venner, and Hallet himself. And everybody was staring at me, and I wanted to get down and hide myself from all their eyes, under the bench.

And Hallet was telling how I drank somewhere—ever so long ago—and Sam said I was always in liquor, and he'd done his best to keep me straight. And Mac Springer told them about never being exactly able to find out how the cars ran off the track. And then I rose up and cried out, begging them to take me off the engine, and only save me from the dead people, and only give me a little rest, for the Seventy-Six was carrying me down to hell.

After that it is all a blank for a long time. They told me, afterwards what happened—I had gone raving mad and they put me in an asylum.

I was in there a long time. It was in the summer of sixty-four that I came out once more.

But Jack, such a crushed, broken heart as I carried forth with me!

I was a foul transgressor—a murderer. And yet, God, who had endured [illegible] let me be [illegible] to ask another chance.

How I loathed myself—how I cried [illegible] that [illegible] body and soul to [illegible] doned the thief on the cross, I cannot tell you in words, Jack!

My memory couldn't [illegible] God, and I [illegible] best that it should be so, so that the fruit of the past should be always with me.

I've told you the simple, plain truth, Jack. There's no varnish on it—just the bald facts. I never [illegible]

The [illegible] er make up—the selling my birthright for a mess of weakest pottage; but I can try to walk humbly, to do justly; and I know to-day that somewhere in the upper world, [illegible] the presence of God's holy angels, the true mother love is waiting for me, and bye and bye, when this old hulk is dismantled, and my soul drifts out on the wide Eternity, God'll bring me to her at the last. [illegible]

[illegible]

Lately when the body of George Kirk was lying at Wilson & Brown's undertaking establishment, on B street, Virginia City, a man who appeared to be a stranger in the city, [illegible] about the door, approached and looked at [illegible] body lying in the coffin.

'[illegible] dead?' asked he of a person standing near.

'Yes, sir,' shortly answered he who was questioned.

Fidgeting [illegible] again: '[illegible] died?'

'Hung,' was the laconic reply.

'Hung!' Ah, hung himself?'

'No; he was hung by the Vigilantes.'

Stranger again—'What did they hang him for?'

'He had been notified to leave the town, and he came back.'

'When a man has been notified to leave, can't he never come back here again and stay?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Yes! Then how is this?'

'Well, he came back, and—pointing to the coffin—you see he stayed.'

It Was Powder.

Recently a young man employed in overhauling a quantity of paper, cards and other printing material in a job printing office on Market street, San Francisco, Cal. discovered a quantity of stuff that had the appearance of powder. 'That looks like powder, and I shouldn't be a bit surprised if it was powder,' said the young man; 'I've a good mind to try if it is powder. But pshaw, come to think, what would powder be doing in a printing-office? No, I guess it's black sand. That's more like it. Sand is used to dry ink; yes, it must be sand. But there's a big lot of it—almost a keg. Now if it should only happen to be powder I could make a speculation by selling it, because the hunting season is coming on. By jiminy! I guess I will try a handful of it.' Having resolved to make the experiment, the young man caught up a handful, carried it off some twenty or thirty steps, and deposited it upon the floor. He then took a piece of paper, and having lighted it, tossed it upon the black substance. The paper burnt brightly for a moment. 'Oh, pshaw! It ain't powder after all. It won't burn. Just my luck—I never had anything that's worth shucks.' The paper [illegible] time burned down, and a single spark, falling, struck the powder and there was a sudden flash. There had been a few grains dropped along the floor, and a bright, sparkling flame flashed along the floor, like lightning athwart a dark horizon, and in an instant there was a terrific explosion. The old safe containing the powder was hurled through the roof, and the cards and papers were scattered in wildest confusion in every direction. The room was filled with smoke, the young man was spread flat on his back, but fortunately not hurt. A number of persons rushed in to see what was the matter. They assisted the prostrate youth to rise, and asked him what was the matter. He looked at the wreck about him, and heaving a sigh, said:

'By jingo, it was powder, after all!'

Mr. Bonner's Ledger [illegible] the authenticity of Goldsmith Maid's time at Milwaukee; whereupon the New York Standard says: 'The Milwaukee track is under the supervision of [illegible] Trotting Association, and [illegible] made there in, [illegible] the members of the Association. 'If Mr. Bonner is an honorable man he will either pay the owner of Goldsmith Maid $50,000 for his sneers, or else give the same amount for the relief of those poor chambermaids who have lost their reason by reading Cobb Jr.'s stories, and are now spending their time in lunatic asylums.'

A little bit of a thing, who had just got back from a party was asked by her mama how she had enjoyed herself. 'O mama!' she said, 'I'm so full of happiness—I couldn't be no happier, without I was bigger.'

A conceited young parson once said:—'This morning I preached to a congregation of asses!' 'I thought of that,' retorted a lady, 'when you called them your beloved brethren!'

'These are hard days,' [illegible] said Pat to himself, as he stood [illegible] waiting for a job on the street corner. 'I [illegible] $[illegible], I must lay up the [illegible] a year for twenty years, or I [illegible] $20 a year for one hundred years. [illegible] which way will I do it?'

The Courier.

AUBURN, IND., SEPT. 21 1871

A Few [illegible] of Senator Morton, in their [illegible], designated him as "Indiana's Great War Statesman," but the Fort Wayne Sentinel has given him a more suitable [illegible], which is being popularized in the State. It is "Indiana's annihilator of Buchu."

A Million Dollars stolen from the peopel's Treasurely, by a single paymaster, is what Radical [illegible] are prone to call the honesty and economy of Grant's administration, because, argue they, it might as well have been five millions, and "here's where the economy comes in."

The State of Maine has been going for the Radicals as follows:

1866	27,690
1867	11,818
1868	20,689
1869	12,478
1870	7,908
1871 (Probable maj.)	8,000
Average majority, 6 years	17,696
Average [illegible], 5 years	3,261

At this rate we do not see that the Republican organs should go into crazy exultation over their late eight or nine thousand majority.

Judge Underwood, the New York carpet-bagger, whom President Lincoln made United States District Judge in Virginia when there were no duties to perform in the office—the State being in the hands of the enemy—is out in a letter, in which he takes ground that women have a right to vote, and that they will vote at the Presidential election in 1872. He says this right is secured to them under the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments. The friends of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments do not appear to understand exactly what was settled by them, or upon whom they conferred suffrage. They had better settle this point before they [illegible] on any "new Democratic departure."

Baltimore is advancing with rapid strides. During the month of August, there were seventy-four entries from foreign ports—five steamships, three ships twenty-two barks, twenty-eight brigs, and fifteen schooners; and of these, thirty-two were under the American flag, twenty-nine British, seven North German, two Argentine, one Sweedish, one Norwegian, and one Astrian. Besides a heavy South American trade, there were four arrivals from Liverpool, bringing assorted cargoes of dry goods, hardware, soda, etc., and from Bremen, four vessels entered with cargoes of a like character. Among the imports were 1,000 tons of railroad iron, 6,843 iron rails, 54,000 cocoanuts, 17,336 bags of salt from Turks Island, 4,896 dozens pine apples, 335 tons of guano, and 1,000 tons plaster. The export trade during the same time corresponded in magnitude with the imports.

The Chicago Times regards the nomination of John Quincy Adams for Governor, by the Democratic Convention in Massachusetts, as an eminently proper and, and gives the following reasons: "Probably no man could be found in the Democratic party of that State who posesses more elements of intelligence and high culture, and a statesman of national dimensions. His selection to head the ticket is the more gratifying because it is quite possible that the Democrats may elect their candidate for Governor. There is less and less prospect that Butler will be nominated by the Republicans, and it now quite certain that he will nevertheless be a candidate. Last year the vote stood as follows: Claflin, Republican, 79,549; Adams, Democrat 48,536; Phillips, Labor Reform, 21,946. With the united vote of the Labor Reformers and the Prohibitionists, added to his personal followers, Butler may be expected to draw enough votes from the Republicans to give the Democratic candidate a majority."

THE NEWS.

The Democrats of New Jersey have nominated Joel Parker for Governor.

If the war between the Republican factions in Massachusetts continues, there is a fair prospect of electing John Quincy Adams Governor by a plurality vote.

Letters received in Washington from Boston say that Butler will be nominated, but that the leading Republicans will bolt the ticket and run Harvey Jewell for Governor.

The history of the late embezzlement by Major Hodge, Paymaster of the United States Army, may be found in these words: "He lived in an extravagant style on a salary of about $2,500 a year."

The New York Herald favors the idea of holding the next Republican National Convention in Boston, and the Sun thinks that the most suitable man to preside over the deliberations of the Convention would be Senator Summer.

It has at last definitely appeared that General Butler is the Administration candidate for Governor of Massachusetts. The Administration organ in Washington, which has abused him like a pickpocket, now comes out in support, while the Federal office holders in Massachusetts, headed by the Collector and Postmaster of Boston are both in the same direction. Boutwell, it is understood, refuses to give Dishonesty of Carpet Baggers.

When our Radical friends have a chance to take a breathing spell over the Tammany corruption, [illegible] upon the following from the speech of Hon. William S. Groesbeck at Steubenville, Ohio.

"Take some examples. Since the Radical reconstruction of these States, the debt of South Carolina has swollen from $6,000,000 to $15,000,000; of Georgia, from $6,000,000 to $20,000,000; of Florida, from half a million to $14,000,000. Senator Thurman reports her entire tax duplicate at $16,00,000. I hardly dare state the estimated increase of the debt of other States. It is enormous. The total increase of the debt of these States is estimated at more that $100,000,000, and the States have little or nothing to show for it. It has been squandered, wasted, and stolen. We hear a great deal about mismanagement in a single locality, the city of New York. It is commented upon everywhere, and those responsible for it are held up for public condemnation. This is right.

But have we nothing to say of this mismanagement over nearly one-third of the Union, and have we no condemnation for the policy that has brought upon these States, in a time of trial and distress, this heavy calamity? No wonder there is disorder, dissatisfaction fault-finding, and bad feeling in those States. Such administration must produce nomically administered: Now there are probably no communities on the earth whose affairs are so badly managed. Those who are known to be competent are forbidden to participate; those who are known to be incompetent are invited to participate. This is radical policy for nearly one third of our Union, in the seventh year of our peace. It is cruel, inexcusable and disgraceful. We are asked, why don't the educated, experienced, and influential citizens of these States bring about a better condition? How can they? Are the laws bad? They are not allowed to take part in making them. Is justice poorly and unfairly administered? They are not allowed to take participate in administering it."

Who Ate Roger Williams?

Ninety years after his death, in 1771, steps were taken to erect some sutiable monument, but the storms of the Revolution came on; and the work was forgotten. But recently the question has been agitated a new, and Williams may yet at least have some outward signs to mark his greatness and perpetuate his name. During a period of one hundred and eighty-three years not even a rough stone has been set up to mark the grave of the founder of Rhode Island, till the precise locality of his grave had been almost forgotten, and could only be ascertained by the most careful investigation. Suffice it to say, however, that the spot was found and the exhumeration made a while ago, though there was little to exhume. On scraping off the turf from the ground, the dim outlines of seven graves contained within less than one square rod, revealed the burial ground of Roger Williams. In Colonial times each family had its own burial ground, which was usually near the family residence. Three of these seven graves were those of children, the remaining four were adults. The easterly grave was identified as that of Mr. Williams.

In digging down into the "charnel house," it was found that every thing had passed into oblivion. The shapes of the coffins could only be traced by a black line of carbonaceous matter, the thickness of the edges of the sides of the coffins, with their ends distinctly defined. The rusted remains of the hinges and nails, with a few fragments of wood and a single round knot was all that could be gathered from his grave. In the grave of his wife there was not a trace of anything save a single lock of braided hair, that had survived the lapse of more than one hundred and eighty years. Near the grave stood a venerable apple tree, but when and by whom planted is not known.

This tree had sent two of its main roots into the graves of Mr. and Mrs. Williams. The larger root had pushed its way through the earth till it reached the precise spot occupied by the skull of Roger Williams. There, making a turn, as is if going around the skull, it followed the direction of the backbone to the hips. Here it divided into two branches, sending one along to the heel, where they both turned upward to the toes. One of these roots formed a slight crook at the knee, which made the whole bear a close resemblance to a human form. This singular root is preserved with great care, not only as an illustration of a great principle in vegetation, but for its historic associations. There were the graves, emptied of every particle of human dust! Not a trace of anything was left!

It is known to chemistry that all flesh, and gelatinous matter giving consistency to the bones, are resolved into carbonic acid gas, water, and air, while the solid lime-dust usually remains. But in this case even the phosphate of lime of the both graves was gone. There stood the "guilty apple tree," as was said, as if just caught in the very act of "robbing the grave." To explain the phenomenon is not the design of this article. Such an explanation could be given, and may other similar cases could be adduced. But this fact must be admitted: the organic matter of Roger Williams had transmitted into the apple tree; it had passed into the woodfiber and was capable of propelling a steam engine; it had bloomed in the apple blossoms, and had become pleasant to the eye, and more, it had gone into the fruit from year to year, so that the question might well be asked, "Who ate Roger Williams?"

The employment of the navy under the present administration is simply disgraceful, and has a tendency to bring the service into disrepute with all decent people. The massacre of Coreans is a positive stain upon the flag, and the backing up of Baez and the San Domingo ring by a squadron of cruisers, is quite as infamous, if not Minnesota Democratic State Convention.

St. Paul, Sept. 13.—The Democratic State Convention met in this city to-day and nominated a ticket. The first and second resolutions declare that the party adheres to the principles of its founder—Thomas Jefferson—and denounces the Republican administration for its profligate corruption and squandering the public money and settled disregard of Constitutional obligations.

The third and fourth resolutions are as follows:

Resolved, That we recognize as binding the Constitution as it now exists.

Resolved, That the prime necessaries of life, such as iron, coal, leather, salt, cotton and woolen goods, ought to be free from tariffs and taxation; that upon all other articles only such taxes and tariffs ought to be imposed as shall be required to meet the wants of the government, economically administered, and that the adjustment of taxes and tariffs with a view of preventing fair competition in trade from any source is subversive of the rights and hurtful to the interests of the mass of the people.

The fifth resolution declares against the growing power of corporations over the people, and in favor of regulating the transportation rates and tariffs by law.

The sixth demands general amnesty.

The seventh resolution declares the party opposed to further land grants to corporations, and that when grants are made they shall be on the condition that the lands shall be sold only to actual settlers at not over $2,50 per acre.

The eighth and last resolution denounces the present State administration as incompetent and unworthy.

The Oldest Man.

In 1814, when Pittsburgh was but a village, an old man named Jacob Fournois, then aged about seventy years, came there from Canada, and after a brief sojourn proceeded to New Orleans in a keel-boat. That old man died a few weeks ago in Kansas City, at the age of one hundred and thirty-four years. Fournois was probably the oldest man living. He was a Canadian Frenchman by birth, but for more than half a century was a hunter and a trapper in the employ of the fur company, one of the French voyageurs, as they are called.

He was never sick, and only a few minutes before he died was walking about the room. He said to the family in the morning that he would "never see the sun go down again," and just before sunset the machine stopped—and the old man was dead.

His age was entered on the census roll last year as one hundred and thirty four years, which is as near as from the best evidence it could be affixed.

His recollection of important events was very good, and, as he was an illiterate man his memory held to isolated occurrences, not of history, as obtained from reading books. This, while it made his information fragmentary and unsatisfactory as to the history of that early period of his life, yet afforded the best evidence as to his great age.

He said he was working in the woods on a piece of land he had bought for himself, near Quebec, when Wolfe was killed on the Heights of Abraham. This was September 14, 1759, and from what he told of his life previous to that, must then have of been over twenty-one years of age. Thinking he might have confounded Wolfe with Montgomery—1775—he was questioned fully, but his recollection of names and incidents was too distinct to leave any doubt, and the same account had been given to others long before.

Another event which he remembered well, and which he seemed always to look upon as a good joke, was that during the occupation of New Orleans by General Jackson—1814–15— he had been refused enlistment "because he was to old." The old man often told this with great glee. He must then have been about eighty years old.

He accompanied the expedition of Lewis and Clark in their explorations of the Missouri and the discovery of the Columbia River in 1803–7. His experience during the trip making him a valuable man to the fur company, he was afterwards employed, as we have stated until thirty years ago.

For the past seven or eight years the old man's recollections of faces were often at fault, but his memory of events and incidents seemed as strong as ever—like pictures in his mind—and this retention of occurrences was the great help in determining his age.

The last thirty years of his life were passed in quiet and comfort. He preferred living by himself, and always had his own house, where he kept his pipe and tobacco-pouch, and such things as were articles of comfort to him, mostly such as he had from his residence with the Indians—not forgetting his rosary and a few religious pictures which hung above his bed. He was very neat in his person clothes and housekeeping, and up to the day of his death attended, in summer, to his tobacco-plants and his cabbages. One of his great desires was to see a railroad, and when the first locomotive came screaming into the bottom, near Kansas City, which was in full view of his house, he was nervous as a child until he visited it. He then expressed himself satisfied, saying he "could tell God he had seen a railroad," and never after expressed any curiosity on the subject.

Truly, Kansas City could boast of having the "champion old man."

The Democrats have lost California by some 5,000. This is in a great degree owing to divisions in the party that chilled all efforts. Besides, Governor Haight, who was running for re-election had become somewhat unpopular, Newton Booth, his opponent, was very popular man and was backed by the whole power and talent of the party. The [illegible] in San Francisco was fatal to the Democrats of that State. California has been a faithful Republican State, always going for Lincoln and Grant. Four years [illegible] not harmonious. The result last week therefore can hardly be considered a gain to

A Paris paper says that a rich American has offered to rebuild the Tuileries solely at his own expense on condition that one of the wings of the new building shall receive his name, and that as long as he lives he shall be allowed an apartment in it looking out on the gardens and an invitation to all the ceremonies which shall ever be given in the palace by any government which may be in power there.

VANDERPOOL ACQUITTED.—The famous Vanderpool murder trial ended to-day the prisoner being acquitted. Vanderpool was tried first at [illegible] convicted and sentenced, obtained a new trial and a change of venue to Kalamazoo, and the result was the jury disagreed. The case was finally sent to Barry county circuit, with the result above stated. The case has been without parallel in the history of criminal trials in this State, and created immense excitement.

The New Jersey Democratic State Convention acted wisely when in nominated for Governor, Hon. Joel Parker of Monmouth. The nomination was by acclamation, and in spite of the refusal of Governor Parker to permit his name to be used. A platform of the right stamp—thoroughly Democratic, and squarely up with the time—was adopted. The proceeding were enthusiastic throughout, a harbinger of the victory to come.

An unusual activity has been noticed in the opening of the fall trade in New York, and is supposed to indicate the approach of a season of reviewed prosperity throughout the country. That such a reaction must at length follow the long depression suffered by the trade and industry of the country, has been expected as a matter of course, and it is to be hoped those who have for years awaited its coming, may not be doomed to longer experience the miseries of hope deferred. A little more of common sense in the management of financial affairs of the government, and a little subservience of the Treasury Department to the peculiar interest represented by Wall street might have materially shortened the period of depression, or averted it altogether.—Chicago Tribune.

Illinois Corn Crop.

The Danville (Ill.) Commercial says: "There has not been such a corn crop as the present one within the recollection of the 'oldest inhabitant.' And he who has the pleasure of a ride over the Illinois Central railroad, as we did a few days ago, will see the corn equal to fat cars raised in old Egypt thousands of years ago. This the railroad that the Englishman, who rode from Dunleith to Cairo, and up to Chicago, called the 'grand, great road, that runs all over the State.' And if the same gentleman had gone over the route in August and seen the corn as it stands along the road now he would have said of the corn, 'The grand, great cornfield that lies all over the State.'

"There is corn enough now in Illinois to feed the nation. The Sucker State is a great State—it has great cornfields, and the Central is truly a great road. May its success be equal to its merits."

President Grant never loses sight of the main chance. The Washington correspondent says:

"The President of the United States dropped in without the ceremony of a visit Thursday last, and after a hasty breakfast, was among the early and punctual visitors at the Treasury to receive his salary, it being pay-day. He has now been absent exactly three months commencing with the first of July, and proposes to remain away until the beginning of October. During this time he has drawn from the Treasury $6,250, and has passed parts of three days in Washington, or at the rate of one day per month, for which he has received the compensation of $2,083 a day. In other words, General Grant singing his name during these rare visits, has pocketed the wages of fourteen hundred laboring men who work ten hours a day and receive $1,50 each. So that it is something to be President in a practical point of view, when the incumbent gets $25,000 a year, for amusing himself, and is presented with bonds, houses and horses the extent of half a million. No wonder he seeks re-election."

The Safety of Dr. Livingstone.

Sir Robert Murchison published the following letter from Dr. Kirk at Zanzibar, dated July 19, 1871:

"I can, I regret to say, give no further accounts of Livingstone. What last I wrote about his visit to that little known place west of Tanganyika is confirmed and the Arabs from that quarter seem to count him quite one of the residents of those places. There is certainly no ill-felling on the part of the Arabs to him. The little jealously they seem to have shown at first has passed off, and I sent a letter a few days ago, by the first caravan of the season, to Ujiji. Do not despair. The Doctor is moving slowly, but safely. He evidently feels his way, and is determined to leave little doubts behind him this time."

Rather Tough.

Squire K., a well-known barrister of Belknap County, N. H., having occasion to transact some business at the Concord court, found a few days at his disposal which he determined to spend in trouting in the mountain brooks. In company with an artist friend, he wandered several miles into the country. Night came down and the sportsman concluded to spend the night at a farmhouse, if permission could be obtained, and return early next morning to the village. A cherry faced old lady granted permission to remain under her roof that night. Now as it was necessary that our legal friend should be at court at eight next day, the good dame arose early and prepared breakfast by the light of a tallow candle. The anglers were seated at the table in a dark corner of the kitchen, while the old lady was engaged over a sizzling frying-pan on the stove. "How's this steak, T., tough, eh?" asked the lawyer, I can't chew the stuff!" continued he. Wiping the sweat from his forehead, he made another effort to masticate the mouthful, then shouted, "My good woman, will you be kind enough to tell why this steak is so very tough?" The pleasant faced old lady appeared with her candle, wiped moisture from her spectacles and looked at the lawyer's plate and shouted with horror: "Great State of Hampshire! I've fried my holder!"

These lots are now in the market, at reasonable figures and those wanting a house should invest immediately.

Singing School.—Prof. A. P. Meyer, who is highly recommended as a very successful music teacher, contemplates getting up a class for instruction in this art.—Those desirous of taking lessons should second his exertions to get get up a good school. There is certainly musical taste and talent enough in our place to support a movement of this kind, and it is hoped that every one will take an interest in having it succeed.

We take pleasure in presenting the fall and winter announcement of the great Palace of Fashion, one price Men & Boys Clothing House, Fort Wayne, Ind. It is conceded to be the largest Wholesale and Retail Clothing House in the State.

A New Railroad Route.—We understand that the citizens of Leesburgh, Kosciusko County, are going to hold a meeting next Saturday to get up a rival route to that one through Albion for the Baltimore R. R. extension. This would take it five miles south of that little benighted burg. With Leesburgh on the south and Goshen on the north, Albion must throw up the sponge. Let the good people there hurry up with that newspaper. A candidate for Congress and a big railroad are mighty undertakings without a newspaper.—Goshen Democrat.

A widow woman, named Margaret Plasly, living six miles west of Wabash, on the 7th inst. murdered three of her children, in the most deliberate though fiendish manner—taking one, a babe, and beating its brains out against a large stone in the yard. She killed the other two, aged respectively eight and ten years by cutting their throats with a butcher knife.

The murderess was arrested and placed in jail where she succeeded in cutting her throat with a piece of glass and died last Saturday.

The grist mill at Palestine, Ind., owned by Croxton Brothers, was burned down on Monday evening last, supposed to have been the work of incendiary. The loss will reach between three and four thousand dollars.—Indianian.

The 'lower jaw-bone' of old 'Chickawick Chiwactiwing' was dug up the other day, near Knox. He died some 300 years ago—an Indian chief, 'noted in his day.' The teeth are in a good state of preservation, but the bony part has very much decayed.—Laporte Herald.

A Great [illegible].—[illegible] for October is to hand, containing [illegible] printed from full size music plates, [illegible] for thirty [illegible]. The Publisher also offers to send, post-paid, for one dollar, six back numbers, containing from ninety to one hundred pieces of choice new music, worth at least $30. Send your order to the Publisher, J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York, and [illegible] your money's worth.

Town Improvements.—The Marshal has succeeded in putting in several new crossings, and has now ceased from his labors. This officer has labored to discharge his duty in a faithful manner, but his hands are tied, and can only move by the authority of the Town Board. [illegible] prevents to stop at this juncture, or are several other important matters to receive the attention of the Board. We hope so. We have not as yet observed any movement towards the building of a public cistern, an indispensable addition to our place. The condition of some of the drains along our streets are fearful, but why they should be so is not exactly apparent. There are other matters equally as important in which our citizens are greatly interested.

On Their Muscle.—A disgraceful sight took place at Newville, a few days ago, between three women. Two married ladies(!) attacked a Miss Smith, on the Sabbath day, on a bridge, yes, right on it, and from a description by an eye witness, they must have been on the muscle some. The good people of Newville feel outraged over the matter. It is no use to attempt to give details,—we havn't got several columns to spare just now. It all originated from talk, and where's the woman that won't talk. But it was the kind of talk that caused the rumpus. Miss Smith is represented to us as a very fine well behaved young lady, but the married two not so much so. After the fight came a law suit. Esq. Mr. Sealy separated the combatants first, and the "chin music" commenced again. Next morning a law suit was participated in and the married duet were fined from $5 to $10 and costs. because one was guilty and one wasn't from their respective standpoints. The immortal J. N. should have been there to have lifted the veil easily, as it was "doubtlessly" ruthlessly torn aside. It was ever thus in childhood days. Tally one for negro—we mean woman suffrage in Newville.

Albion, said to be the county seat of Noble county, boasts that the Baltimore extension will [illegible] through that place beyond a peradventure, and flaunts the fact in the face of Goshen, and tauntingly speaks of lake Michigan as an interposition of providence in their behalf and expressly so located to defeat the hopes of Goshen. Well, in olden times Goliah strutted, puffed and defied the armies of God's chosen people. He staked the issue of the war upon a duel with himself if Israel could but find a man to accept the challenge of the boasting giant swell.—The man was found. The stripling slew the foul blasphemer and gained a splendid victory. Albion comes out Goliah like; but Goshen deals in facts and figures in favor of the northern route that takes the wind out of Albion's sails We rest the case and await results.—Mishawaka Enterprise.

The above comparison is good but wrongly applied. Size has considerable to do with it, and you can't make the smaller represent the larger, no how. Come, Mont., you're clever, but don't distort things so horribly. Albion is the smallest, and therefore must represent David, when the above quotation is given, and we think he will do that little business yet for Go[liah] these, especially when sophisms like the above are mostly indulged in to secure railroads.

FRESH FISH at Smith & Hare's.

Supposed Murder Case.

The citizens of the north-east part of the county have been somewhat agitated over what appeared to them as a probable murder, regarding which we have learned the following facts:

One Ruben Everhart went to Waterloo, some two weeks ago last Saturday, and obtained medicine for some ailment with which he was then suffering. Returning in the evening, he gave it to his wife, telling her to mix it up for him to take. She asked him what it was but he refused to tell. He took the medicine, and in a short time was seized with spasms and died that night. None of the neighbors were called in until the next morning, except, perhaps, one or two that were near by. The corpse was burried in due time, but the people began to have grave suspicions about the matter, and the body was disinterred for examination. The verdict of the jury was that he came to a natural death, and the body was again deposited in mother earth. But this did not give satisfaction and the body was again exhumed, and the stomach and other organs taken out and [illegible] in vessels for chemical analysis. The wife of the deceased was arrested together with an old man, the husband of her grandmother as principals in the murder, and taken before Justice Umpstead, at Butler, where an examination was made and the woman held to answer the sum of $1,000. The old man was discharged. The stomach is still in the hands of the proper one, awaiting an allowance from the Commissioners to have it analyzed which will cost, perhaps, $200 As the evidence so far has not been of a very positive character, we doubt if there will be anything done in the premises.

We learn from D. D. Metcalf, Esq., our efficient Coroner, that an inquest was held on the body before it was buried the first time, and that the woman has admitted that she gave the deceased poison at his direction.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer puts the following query for some Republicans to answer:

General Grant has been President now for two years and a half. Within that period there has been collected in taxes not less than $1,000,000,000. In addition he has had $100,000,000 more from the sale of government property, making $1,100,000,000 in all. It is claimed by the friends of the President that he has paid off $200,000,000 of the public debt. Granting that, what has become of the other $900,000,000? Can any one tell? Seventy Millions a year used, in Democratic days, to run the government! Will some Republican friend enlighten us as to the remaining $900,000,000?

Letter From Minnesota.

We are permitted to give the following extracts from a letter written to the [illegible] Club, of [illegible], by our former townsman, George Kuhlman, Esq., who we are glad to learn is fast regaining his former health:

Faribault, August 30, 1871.

Gentlemen: According to promise I write to you to-day. I have located at the above named place after traveling over a greater portion of the State of Minnesota. This place is situated about [illegible] west of the Mississippi river. I will not grow raptures on the State of Minnesota, but I do think this is a glorious country, in appearance at least. I will not say that it is a more desirable country than Indiana, in fact, I think in many respects it is not so desirable. If I were to state my first impression I should say that the summer season was rather too short to make it desirable for farming purposes.—Crops apparently grow much faster here than they do further south, and so do weeds and grass. This, I think, hurries the farmer a little to much, but still you can hear no such complaint among them. Land is worth from $10 to $20 per acre in this part of the State, a few miles out from town, but land joining the town platt is selling for $200 and upwards. The soil is splendid. They raise all kind of grain, and this vicinity is said to be the best corn producing land in the State, in fact this is considerable of a pork market. The population is composed of people from all parts of the United States, and Canada.

The proprietor of this town, Mr. Faribault, is a half breed, and his wife is a regular squaw who eats with her fingers, sitting on the floor while the balance of the family put on some style, drive fast horses &c.

I saw the spot where thirty-eight Indians shuffled off their mortal coil, and another tree where one made his exit, thirty-nine in all were hung in propitiation for the crimes committed in the outbreak of 1862. I see by the Auburn paper that you have had cold and disagreeable weather for some time past, it certainly appears strange, for we have had fine, warm, and beautiful weather for the last five weeks.

I was offered yesterday three cows for $22 $28 and $35 respectively. 'Porkers' are high and I have seen but one or two since I am in the State.

The fences are built about sixteen feet long, are nailed on posts set eight feet apart. The fences would answer the purpose were it not for one thing. You may go to bed at night thinking perhaps that your fence is all right, but when you get up in the morning you may find that your basswood has warped the fence to some other part of the farm. This may appear somewhat exagerated, but you know the dutchman said "there is nothing unpossible mit Got."

There are great chances for speculation here in this State if a man had a little money. There are some towns in the State that beat the the world for improvements. The Town of Rochester, for instance, not yet twenty years old has a hotel that cost $100,000 a public school house worth $20,000, it is the finest school house I ever saw, and county buildings and churches to compare with them and the place is simply a county seat with a railroad and no other advantages that I can see.

They have several railroads and the Minnesota river for outlets. Good lots on a business street are worth $100 per foot, and lots for residences away out in the woods where the No. of the streets are marked on the trees, and as the immortal J. N Free says, I could not stand the pressure there, and so upon the whole I concluded to locate at Faribault (pronounced Fairbo). This is a very fine town, the population is about 4000 and there are a great many good people living here. It is located right in the edge of a large body of timbered country and have fine water power, plenty of good building stone &c. There is also located here a college with regular faculty which is under the supervision of the Episcopal Church and is patronized by students from all parts of the Union. The Asylum for the deaf and dumb and blind is also located here.

There are eight or nine churches here and all are well attended. Some of the building are splendid. One of Congregational Churches cost about $30,000, and the Cathedral cost $75,000. I consider this one of the most beautiful countries in the world and I believe it is healthy.

George Kuhlman.

Chas. Klein, our enterprising merchant tailor, has just received and opened one of the finest and largest stocks of clothing and piece goods ever brought to town. Men and Boys' suits made to order.

The Next State Convention.—It is probably that the next Democratic State Convention in Indianapolis will practically decide whether Thomas A. Hendricks shall be the Democratic candidate for the Presidency.

All Democrats who desire his nomination will see the necessity of placing him in the field by a clear expression of the Democracy of Indiana in open convention before other men have been nominated by the formal expression of other States. Let it be known that Indiana is for Hendricks Give him the advantage of an early nomination by his own neighbors and friends. The Democrats of other States will be more ready to follow if Indiana leads.

Mr. Hendricks might have been nominated at New York in 1868, if Indiana had not been committed to another man as a first choice. The question at this time is whether Hendricks is our first choice now If he is not he will certainly be defeated. The friends of Mr. Hendricks desire an early convention.—Evans. Courier.

If the choice of the Democracy of Indiana is to decide whether Thomas A. Hendricks shall be the Democratic candidate for the Presidency then it is already determined, for he is the first choice of 'his own neighbors and friends.' This fact the Democrats of other States well understand and if they are ready to follow if Indiana leads they will fall into line. With pleasure we publish these views of the Courier or any other suggestions it has to make to secure the nomination of Indiana's favorite son for the Presidency.—State Sentinel.

Beware of Counterfeits.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All parties should be on their guard and look for the [illegible] number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to one house, in Fort Wayne this fall. New goods and lowest prices.

Gov. Baker still holds on to his five thousand dollar [illegible]. What a precious "Old Hunkey!" If the people of Indiana ever get a chance at him again, they will change that talisman and make it read "Old Skinflint."

A Mary[illegible] [illegible]tors—Fire has no Effect on his Flesh.

[From the New York Herald.]

Business recently called me to the eastern shore of Maryland, to the point from which we write, the county seat of Ta[illegible] heard from several gentlemen of prominence the story of the negro blacksmith who lived in an adjoining county, upon whom fire had no effect whatever.

A day or two after I first heard of this remarkable ne[illegible] son, editor of the E[illegible] at my room, and st[illegible] was in town, and t[illegible] were going to mak[illegible] him at the office of [illegible] invited me to witn[illegible] which I very glad[illegible]

A brisk fire of [illegible] burning in a comm[illegible] an iron shovel was [illegible] and heated to a wh[illegible] was ready, the negro pulled off his boots and placed the hot shovel upon the soles of his feet and kept it there until the shovel became black. His feet were then examined by the physicians, but no burns could be found, and all declared that no evidence of a heated substance having come in contact with them was visible.

The shovel was again heated red-hot, taken from the stove and handed to him. He ran out his tongue as far as he could, and laid the heated shovel upon it, licking the iron until it became cooled. The physicians examined the tongue, but found nothing to indicate that he had suffered in the least from the heated iron.

A large handful of common squirrel shot, procured from a store near Dr. Stack's office, was then placed in an iron receptable and heated until melted. The negro then took the dish poured the heated lead into the palm of his hand, and then put it into his mouth, allowing it to run all around his teeth and gums. He repeated the operation several times, each time keeping the melted lead in his mouth [illegible]. After each operation the physicians examined him carefully, but could find nothing upon his flesh to indicate that he had been in the least affected by the substance he had been handling. After the peformance with the lead he deliberately put his hand into the stove, in which was a very hot fire, took therefrom a handful of [illegible] and passed them around to each of the gentlemen present, keeping them in his hand some time. Not the slightest evidence of a burn was visible upon his hands after he threw the coals back into the stove.

The exhibition was regarded by all who witnessed it as most remarkable, for there was no opportunity for the practice of chicanery.

After [illegible] his [illegible] ances, Dr. Stack [illegible] brought [illegible] opportunity to converse with him. I found him very ignorant, not able to read or write, and in all respects an unadulerated negro.

His name is Nathan Coker, and he is about sixty-eight years of age. He was born in the town of Hillsborough, Caroline county Md., and was the slave of Henry L. Sellers of that place; by whom he was sold to Bishop Emary. In relation to his ability to handle fire, and how he first became aware of it, he said; "Boss when I war about thirteen years old, old Massa Emary hired me out to a lawyer whose name was Purnell. He treated me badly, and didn't give me enough to eat. I skirted around the kitchen one day, and when the cook left I shot in, dipped my hand into the dinner pot and pulled out a red hot dumpling. The boiling water did not burn and I could eat the hot dumpling without winking; so after dat I often got my dinner dat way. I has often got the fat off the boiling water and drank it. I drink my coffee when it is boiling, and it does not give half so much pain as it does to drink a glass of cold water. I always likes it just as hot as I can get it."

I then interogated him as to the effect heated substances had upon his flesh, and asked him when he handled them with his hands if he did not suffer more than when he took them inwardly to which he replied, "No, Boss, I often take my iron out of the forge with my hand when red hot, but it don't burn. Since I was a little boy I have never been afraid to handle fire."

I am thoroughly convinced, from personal observation, that fire has no effect whatever upon his flesh; and I am sustained in that belief by the united judgement of all gentlemen who have seen him including a large number of physicians.

Fight Between a Cat and a Snake.

A few days ago a gentleman who is engaged in farming [illegible] was walking through the [illegible] where his hands were plowing, when he discovered a cat at some distance coming toward him. Presently the cat turned aside, and squatting very low, appeared to creep stealthily along as though in search of game. He checked his step to see if he could discover what was up. He soon discovered a snake, about a foot and a half or two feet long, and as the cat approached the snake coiled and put himself in a striking position. The cat instantly walked directly up to the snake and held out one foot near his snakeship's head, as if daring him to strike. Master snake, being full of spunk, was not the chap to take a dare, consequently he responded with his full strength; but when his head should have been in direct contact with the cat's paw the [illegible] that; and before the head could be withdrawn, it received a heavy blow from the cat's foot, and the paw was again presented [illegible] After [illegible] the snake seemed to remember 'he who fights and runs away may live to fight another day,' and with this understanding he uncoiled and started to quit the field. VINEGAR BITTERS

J. Walker, Proprietor. R. H. McDonald & Co., Druggists and Gen. Agents, San Francisco, Cal., and 34 Commerce Street, N. Y.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, [illegible] Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

[illegible] When [illegible] bear [illegible] affair in [illegible] years ago [illegible] know [illegible] nature [illegible] the [illegible] gens of his [illegible] especially sometimes stranger than fiction.

[illegible] early [illegible] of Vassar [illegible] west side of [illegible] opposite, [illegible] of the [illegible] Getchell was [illegible] and sent his son Remington [illegible] stout young fellow of 16, [illegible] West Point appointment for Dr. [illegible] happened to be visiting [illegible] the distance was about five miles through the woods. He [illegible] having with him a well-trained dog, did his message, and after [illegible] was about to set out on his journey home.

When he entered the woods the sun was about an hour high. He had not proceeded far when he saw his dog pursuing a cub. He at first thought he would help him capture the cub and carry him home with him; but he immediately thought of the old bear, and expecting she would be upon him in an instant, he sprung to the nearest tree, which was a slim Norway pine, running up forty or fifty feet without a limb; but the boys of that day could climb trees much better than the full fed lads of the present. When he had got up eight feet he saw the bear coming after him. He called to his dog, which made a furious assault upon the bear behind. She, fearing for her cub, immediately turned back and chased the dog off and around for a considerable time. Remington, in the meantime, exerted himself to the utmost. She came back to the tree again, but the faithful dog was at her heels. She then turned and chased him off as before.

This was again repeated, which gave Remington time to reach the first limb; he got hold of it and drew himself on to it, much exhausted, and stood upon it with his arms around the tree.

After a while the bear, either disregarding the dog, or perhaps he had been disabled in the fight, began to ascend. It was now that Remington began to give himself over for lost. The poor fellow had no means of defending himself, and could see no prospect out that of being dragged down from the fearful height, and torn to pieces by the infuriated beast.

Up came the fiend steadily advancing, intent upon her trembling victim, "like a staunch murderer steadily to his purpose." She soon reached him, and reached forward with open jaws and glaring eyeballs, to seize him by the foot. He drew it back, and, with a convulsive, superhuman effort, he dealt it rapid and heavy blows upon the neck and head. This was a reception she was not prepared for, she was obliged to take it quietly, not having the use of her fore paws. A bear, without the use of these weapons, is quite harmless, unless she can get hold with her teeth. Her hold was immediately broken, and she lost her balance and fell.—This could hardly have been caused by the force of the blows, considering the strength of the bear's grasp.

It is the first impulse of a bear, when attacked or resisted, to strike with his fore paws. Prompted by this instinct, she had probably let go her hold upon the tree to strike at Getchell, still retaining a feeble hold by her hind legs; but her instinct at once proved a failure, for being directly underneath, she naturally swayed her [illegible] to bring her paws to bear, and the blow coming at the same time, she let go the [illegible] which quickened her movement and she lost her equilibrium.

Turning a summersault, head down, till on her [illegible] ship, in accordance with the law of gravitation, soon landed on [illegible] at a distance of about forty feet in a perpendicular line from where she started. [illegible] sat upon her haunches for a time, looking up the tree, [illegible] what to do next. She was not probably highly pleased with her aerial excursion, and upon mature reflection thought she would not climb that unlucky tree again, but finally ascended another near by and sat upon it looking at Getchell gnashing her teeth and growling.

It was now growing dark. Remington had been crying an hour for help but no help came. He heard the chopping half a mile off, but the wind being contrary they could not hear him. As the sound of the axes ceased, his hope left him; but as a kind Providence had ordered it, a woman was out near the edge of the woods looking for her cow, her husband being absent, and heard Remington's cries. Her husband returned home after dark, and earnestly besought him to go and get help and ascertain what the trouble was. He declined going, saying that the noise she heard was that of a screechowl. But she insisted that it was a human voice, and begged of him to go. At length, yielding to her entreaties, he mounted a horse and rode into the woods in the direction she pointed out, and soon heard Remington's voice. Pursuing in the direction of the sound, he soon got within speaking distance, calling to him to inquire what was the matter. On being informed, the man replied that he rather thought he was only frightened, and advised him to come down. At that moment the bear hearing the man's voice, commenced to growl furiously, which so frightened [illegible]

Remington [illegible] up all hope [illegible] He now felt his hopes revive; but it was forlorn hope. He doubted not that [illegible] but his strength was nearly exhausted, and his nerves so disordered, that the he feared [illegible] to help him. He [illegible] hold upon the tree but a short time longer.

In about three-quarters of an hour after the man left him, he heard the distant sound of voices, and soon saw the gleam of lights through the trees. A large party had been raised, who, with guns, ammunition and torches, hastened to the rescue. They were accompanied by a large number of men, women, boys and girls, all with torch-lights.

The remainder of the is soon told. They built up a large fire, by the light of which they could take good and certain aim at the bear which was still on the perch in the tree, and now remained there to keep out of harm's way. But she had not been initiated into the science of gunpowder and ball. They soon brought her down but not until they had fired ten or twelve shots. Remington came safely down, through at great hazard of falling. He was carried home next morning to his anxious friends.

The fright and over exertion he had endured had so shattered his constitution and nervous system that, though he had been an uncommonly strong and athletic youth, he was ever after comparatively weak. He would never venture into the woods alone, and the chirping of a squirrel would make him nervous.

Pennsylvanian Picks Up a $75,000 Diamond in South Africa

A New York World correspondent, writing from the South African diamond fields, under date of June 13, says: Mr. J. B. Hopkins, from Lockport, Pa., came to South Africa two months ago, and last Monday the wind was blowing so hard, causing thick clouds of dust so that no one could remain in their claims. Hopkins wandered out from the camp and over the plain, and observing some garnets shining on the ground about a mile and a half from the camp, he dropped on his knee and elbow, and picking them up commenced to search for more, when a bright point came to view. Scraping under this, out popped a magnificent fifty five and an eight karat diamond, octahedron, flawless and speckless, and at peculiar color that is so fashionable in England, and worth in the United States at least $75,000. When it made its appearance Hopkins was paralyzed for a moment, and the diamond could have been taken from him without his having the power to prevent it. Hopkins and I are partners now, and on the 4th of September we leave for America, via Cape Town and England, with over $100,000 worth of rough diamonds of all colors, shapes and sizes.

A Remarkable and Touching Obituary.

A good newspaper story is being told of the Colusa Herald. The editor of the Herald had occasion to leave town for a few days, and entrusted his valuable organ to the care of an ambitious youth who was a novice in journalism. His instructions on leaving were, "Always keep in mind the fact the object of this paper is to extend its circulation." He then went away, and the following night his wife died very suddenly. This is how the assistant editor mentioned the circumstance:

"Gone, but not Forgotten.—We are compelled, this morning, to perform a duty which is peculiarly painful to the able assistant editor, who has been engaged on this paper at an enormous expense, in accordance with our determination to make the Herald a first-class journal. Last night death unexpectedly snatched away, from our domestic hearth (the best are advertised under the head of stoves and furnaces upon our first page,) Mrs. Agatha P. Burns, wife of Rufus P. Burns, the gentlemanly editor of the Herald (terms, three dollars a year, invariably in advance.) We shall miss thee, mother, we shall miss thee." (Job printing solicited.)—Funeral at 4½ from the h[illegible] just across the street from the Herald office. Gone to be an angel now. (Advertisements inserted for ten cents a square.)

The story has this unhappy ending. The editor arrived home that day noon. Slowly and sadly he was observed to arm himself with a double barreled fowling-piece, into which he inserted about two pounds and a half of bullets. He marched over to the office, followed by an immense crowd. The assistant editor was busy in writing a big placard to be tacked on the hearse. It bore the legend, "Buy your coffins of Simms, over the Herald office." The assistant editor cast his eyes around and perceived his Chief. Care sat upon that wan cheek, and thunder clothed his brow. He leveled his gun. The assistant did not wait. With one wild and awful yell he jumped from the second story window, and struck out for the golden shores of the Pacific. It is believed he eventually swam over to China.

A school-master in Bridgeport, Conn., who asked a small pupil of what the surface of the earth consists, and was prompt ly answered "land and water," varied the question slightly that the fact might be impressed on the boy's mind, and asked, 'What then do land and water make?'—to which came the immediate response of the boy, 'Mud.'

A Dutchman married a second wife in about a week after the death of No. 1. The [illegible] following the [illegible] asked [illegible] to take her riding, and was duly 'cut up' with the following [illegible] 'You dink I ride out [illegible] so soon after the death of [illegible]? No! no!'

'Will you take this woman to be your wife?' 'Well, squire,' was the reply, 'you must be a green un to ask me such a question as that. Do you suppose I'd be such a plaguy fool as to give up the [illegible] take this gal to the quilting frolic if I want conscriptiously sartin and determined to have? Drive on with your business.'

Some ingenious Yankee has invented a process by which maple sugar can be made out of common New Orleans molasses, flavoring it by steaming maple wood. A contemporary says: The next thing we are looking for [illegible] of prolific ideas is a process whereby they will make honey from cod liver oil, flavoring it with beeswax.

The quiet breakfast of a family in Lowell Mass., was rudely interrupted a few mornings ago by the landlady, who bolted into the room with the exclamation, 'An' sure, Missis, I thought I'd come and tell yez that I couldn't wash for ye this mornin', as me boy is sick with the smallpox, and is black as me old man's hat.' She was allowed to depart, without further apology or explanation.

A CONTENTED PEASANT.—Once upon a time, Frederick, King of Prussia, surnamed 'Old Fritz,' took a ride, and espied an old farmer plowing his acre by the wayside, cheerily singing his melody. 'You must be well off, old man,' said the king. 'Does this acre belong to you on which you so industriously labor?' 'No, sir,' replied the farmer, who knew not that he was the king; 'I am not so rich as that; I plow for wages.'

A few weeks ago a baby was taken to a church to be baptized, and as the little brother was present during that rite. On the following Sunday when baby was undergoing his ablutions and dressing, the little brother asked mama if she intended to carry Willie to be Christened. 'Why, no,' replied his mother; 'don't you know, my son, that people are not baptized twice?' 'What?' returned the young reasoner, with the utmost astonishment in his face, 'not if it don't take the first time, mama?'

Baron Jas. de Rothschild, during the Communist period in Paris, was one morning seated in his cabinet, when two fellows from the faubourgs, armed to the teeth, entered and asked to be shown to the citizen Rothschild.

'Gentlemen,' said he, 'what can I do for you?' [illegible] 'this is what we have come to say: [illegible] millions [illegible] the people want bread; so you will share, or, if not [illegible]'

'Share? Very well. How many are you in France?'

'Perhaps thirty millions.'

'And how much money do you suppose I have?'

'Say a hundred and fifty millions.'

'Well, then, among thirty millions that is five francs each. You are two. Here are ten francs for you, and now we are quits.'

The men were so confounded by the argument, and by the rapidity with which the whole incident occurred, that they took the money and disappeared.

WHY AUNT SALLIE NEVER MARRIED.

'Now, Aunt Sally, do please tell us why you never got married. You know [illegible] when you were engaged to a minister, and promised that you would tell us all about it sometime. Now, Aunt, please do [illegible]'

'Well, if ever I did see such girls in all my born days! It's tease, tease, from morning till night; you must know all about everything you haven't no business to know anything about. Such inquisitive [illegible] little critters as you are! When I was young girls were different; they minded their business, and didn't go sailing around with a whole string of beaux, getting their heads filled with all kinds of nonsense. I never dared to ask my aunts married or single, about any of their affairs. A pretty mess I'd have got it, if I had. When they offered to tell me anything of their own accord I kept my mouth shut, and listened. Everything is quite different now-a-day; young folks have no respect for their elders. But as I am not going to have any peace till I do tell you, why just listen, and don't let me hear a word out of one of your mouths till I get through.'

'That's right, Aunt Sally; now go right ahead, do, and we will keep perfectly still.'

'Well you see, when I was about seventeen years old, I was living in Utica, in the State of New York. Though I say it myself, I was quite a good looking girl then, and had several beaux. The one that took my fancy most, was a young man, a minister, a very promising young man, and remarkably pious [illegible] He thought a good deal of me, and I took a fancy to him and had kind of hankerin' arter him, and after while things run till we were engaged to git married. One evening he come to me—I remember it just as well as if it were only yesterday. When he came into the parlor where I was alone, he came to me and—but now, pshaw! girls I don't like to tell the rest.'

'Oh, Aunt Sally, for mercy's sake, don't stop; tell us what he said.'

'Well, as I said, he came up to me and put his arms around my neck, and [illegible] hugged me, when I got kinder excited, and somewhat frustrated. It was a long time ago, and I don't know but what I might have hugged him back a little. Then I [illegible]—but now just clear out, every one of you, for I sha'nt tell you any more.'

'Goodness, gracious, no, Aunt Sally. Oh, do please tell us how you felt. Didn't you feel mighty good? Aunt, do pray tell us what he did next?'

'Oh such torments as you are! I was like any other girl, and pretty soon I pretended to be mad about it and pushed him away, though I wasn't mad a bit. You must know that house where I lived was one of the [illegible] right over the [illegible] a balcony [illegible] As it was in the summer [illegible] the doors were open [illegible] I pushed him [illegible] and don't you think, girls, the poor fellow lost his balance and [illegible] through one of the doors into [illegible] I [illegible] him—but I do [illegible] I won't tell anything more—I am going to leave this here room.'

'No, no, Aunt Sallie. How did you catch him? Did it hurt him much?'

'Well, if I must, I must. He fell head first, and as he was going I caught him by the legs of his breeches. I held on for a minute and tried to pull him back, but the suspenders gave way and the poor young man fell clear out of his pantaloons into a parcel of ladies and gentlemen passing along the street.'

'Oh, Aunty, Aunty, Lordy, Lordy!'

'There, that's right, cackle and giggle as much as you want to. Girls, that can't hear a little thing like that without tearing around the room like [illegible] enough to [illegible] when it [illegible] the man who marries one of you will [illegible] Catch me telling you any more.'

'But Aunt Sallie, what became of [illegible]'

SUPERIOR PORTER.—Stranger: "Have you a good strong porter in the house?"

Clerk: "Yes, we have the strongest about the place."

Stranger: "Is he intelligent?"

Clerk: "Oh yes, quite intelligent for a porter we think."

Stranger: "One point more. Do you consider him fearless—that is, bold and courageous?"

Clerk: "As for that matter, I know he is; he would not be afraid of the devil himself."

Stranger: "Now Mr. Clerk, if your porter is intelligent enough to find room No. 117, fearless enough to enter, and strong enough to get my trunk away from the bedbugs, I would like to have him bring it down."

Went for Him,

A rough-looking specimen of humanity was recently promenading up Chatham street, New York, when he came plumbly upon a Jew, a specimen of his race about whom there is no mistake.

Without a word of warning, the rough knocked him sprawling into the gutter. Picking himself up, and taking his bleeding nose between his finger and thumb, he demanded an explanation.

"Shut up, I'll bust yer again!" shout ed the aggressor, approaching him again.

"I have never done noting mit you and what for you mash me in the nose?" asked Abraham.

"Yes yer have; yer Jews crucified Jesus Christ, and I have a mind to go for you agin."

"But, mine Gott, dat vas eighteen hundred years ago," said the Jew.

"Well, I don't care if it was; I only heard of it last night," replied the unwashed, and he went for him again.

"My lord, I really assure you I committed the theft in a weak moment; quite, indeed, against my own will, my lord, quite."

"Oh, very well," said his lordship, "it is only right that you should have no cause for complaint. The offense will be met in a proper spirit. As you committed the act against your own will, you will be punished against your own will."

"Well, what do you call it?"

"I call it iron pyrites."

A railroad employee gives the following account of his first interview with Commodore Vanderbilt: "It was a rainy day in Summer, and I was busy about my work. Coming to the head of a narrow stairway, down which I wished to go in a hurry, I saw an old gentleman, with tight clothing on, wet and spattered with mud, coming slowly up the stairs, and I sang out to him: 'Come, hurry up, old chap, for I want to go down these stairs myself.' He came deliberately up, and when he reached the floor on which I stood he stretched himself up to his full length when I instinctively felt—this is Commodore Vanderbilt himself; for, mind you, I had never seen him. I at once said, 'This is Commodore Vanderbilt, I believe?' He said 'Yes,' and I went on to say, 'If you will excuse me, as I was in a hurry to go down stairs to my work, and did not know who it was.' 'Why the devil don't you go down, then?' [illegible] me, and went on his way. I never saw him before that time, and I have never seen him since."

Horace Greeley gave vent to the following at Chicago: "When we take hold of Grant it will not be with silk gloves on our hands. It has got to be done. We must throw Grant overboard or we shall be defeated."

Ben Butler, in one of his late speeches in Massachusetts, said that it was a part of his mission to purify the Republican party. The party must be in a desperate condition that needs such a purgator.

Even the New York Tribune is ashamed at the developments of the Hodge defalcation and exclaims: "The system which permits such frauds to continue, uninterrupted so long, is monstrous! In many other sets of accounts has there been equal looseness?"

THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMEN.—The Pittsburg Post of yesterday contains and editorial proposing a sixteenth amendment to the constitution, which removes disability from citizens of foreign birth from being eligible to the Presidency, and gives Carl Schurz an even chance with Fred Douglas.

Leading Republican papers in New Jersey admit that the Democrats have made a good nomination for Govenor, and claim the same for their own. The question of personal fitness being thus set aside, they express a determination that "the battle shall be fought out on the broad and comprehensive ground of principle alone."

ABOUT PLAYED.—The farce which has been going on for some time, at Indianapolis, in the case of the State versus R. J. Bright for perjuring, was suddenly brought to a stand still by the jury disagreeing. Eight of the jurors stood for acquittal, and four against. Those against were all Republicans, all, perhaps that could be bought by the Journal Co.

The citizens of Jeromeville, Ashland county, Ohio, are excited about a monstrous serpent that has been seen in that vicinity lately by several reliable witnesses. Its length is estimated at twenty-five to thirty-five feet, and its thickness equal to that of a large man's body. It diets on half-grown lambs and pigs belonging to farmers in the vicinity. Hunting parties are after his snakeship.

THE Radical office holders throughout the country, succeed in stealing three hundred million of the people's money and the Republicans [illegible] in haste to assure the country that the party cannot be held responsible for the acts of a few individuals. The Tammany ring corruption being exposed by its own party the Republican papers herald the fact as evidence of corruption and thievery in the Democratic party. Very funny, isn't it.

And now comes another pleasant little bill for the people to pay. It foots up at something over eleven million of dollars, and its claimed to be due to Mexico for certain diversions indulged in by our troops at Bagdad and Piedras Negras. It would seem to be advisable to postpone the liquidation of these claims until some reparation is had for the recent outrages upon American merchant vessels off the Mexican coast.

Here is the way the money goes. A dispatch from Washington says the Treasury Department continues to send a detachment of three clerks to London with each installment of the new bonds that goes out to the Syndicate. Eighteen of these favorite gentlemen are now abroad, enjoying themselves at the Government's expense, and four more detachments are yet to go, making thirty in all. Their passage and all other traveling expenses are paid, and they are allowed to be absent for periods of six weeks each, giving them time to make little trips on the continent.

A California paper says the recent election in California developed a species of fraud that is at once novel and scientific. On a number of ballots, nitrate of silver had been applied to the name of taxpayers' candidate for Assessor. This substance produces no immediate effect, so that the voter would deposit the ballot without suspicion. By the time, however, that the box was opened to count the vote, the name was entirely erased by the chemical action of the drug on the ink. It is painful to see so respectable a science as chemistry prostituted to the purpose of election frauds.

It is said that Grant is now quite willing to make up with Sumner. Let us have peace.

"I was educated in the Democratic party. I remained in that party till 1854; but when it repealed the Missouri Compromise and committed that great crime, which was in fact the beginning of the war, I left it and I am prepared to leave the Republican party whenever it becomes false to its principles.—Senator Morton.

To which the Cincinnati Enquirer responds as follows: In 1854 the Democracy, as now, were opposed to National Banks and to a high protective tariff. They were in favor of a strict construction of the Federal Constitution, and of the preservation of the reserved rights of the States. They were against despotism in any of its forms. What is there in the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, an old and dead statute, that should induce Morton to favor all those measures, which, in 1854 he opposed? He is now a bank, tariff, consolidationist and anti-reserved State rights man. What has wrought this change is the loaves and spoils of office.

The Cottage at Long Branch.

Some additional testimony respecting the gift to President Grant of the cottage at Long Branch is furnished by Mr. George Alfred Townsend in the Chicago Tribune. This gentleman states the case as follows:

"Tom Murphy, a Tammany jobber, discovered soon after Gen. Grant's inauguration what sort of fellowship was required at the White House to qualify him for an office; he united with John Hoey and other folks to present the President with a cottage and franchises at Long Branch; the obligation was discharged by the relinquishement of the Collectorship to Mr. Murphy."

Thus from every side comes the evidence that the house which Gen. Grant lives in at Long Branch was a gift Mr. Murphy was appointed Collector of New York. Can the Republican members of Congress refuse to make a thorough investigation of this subject—not a whitewashing investigation, such as they made in the case of the great gold conspiracy, but an earnest and thoroughgoing examination of the whole matter and of all the facts connected with it? Their duty promises would seem to be perfectly plain. If they try to avoid it, they will not clear President Grant and Mr. Murphy, but will bring themselves anew under the suspicion of caring more for their party and for its temporary leaders than for public morality and honest government.

A MAGICAL WAY OF COUNTING MONEY.—When Daniel Webster was secretary of state, Signor Blitz called on him at Washington, when the following dialogue took place:

"What has brought you to Washington?"

"I have come for an office, sir."

"An office! What office is there under the government of the United State for a magician?"

"To count the money in the treasury. I should like you to take $100,000 of treasury notes and count them carefully. I will then count them also, when it will appear that there are only $75,000."

"Ah! Signor," said Mr. Webster, "that won't do. We have magicians in Washington who, if $100,000 were to pass through their hands, would leave nothing of it."

Gen. Ben. Butler found Senator Sumner and Senator Wilson together in Boston the other day. "Did you," asked Butler, "authorize the announcement that you were both against my nomination for Governor?" "We did," was the prompt and manly answer.

In the summer of 1864 Gen. Grant, at City Point, issued an order removing Gen. Butler from the command of the army of the James. The order was issued after much deliberation. A copy was sent to Butler at Bermuda Hundred in the evening. The next morning he came over to City Point with order in his hand. "Did you," he asked Gen. Grant, "direct that this order should be issued?" Grant seemed to be stunned. He fumbled with the paper. "No, sir," he stammered; "I did not direct it to be issued in this form." The order was withdrawn and Butler remained in command of the Army of the James until his failure at Fort Fisher.

The contrast between the weakness of Gen. Grant before the bullying of Butler and the [illegible] of Sumner and Wilson is interesting.

AUDITOR OF STATE.—We are sorry to see a disposition on the part of some of the Democratic papers of this District to oppose the renomination of Hon. John C. Shoemaker for the office of Auditor of State. Mr. Shoemaker is now on his first term, and has made an efficient and honest officer, and we can see no cause why any one should desire to him defeated for renomination. If any of the present State officers are to be "thrown overboard," let all be, an entire new ticket placed in the field. Mr. Shoemaker is the only man who has been elected from the First District on the State ticket for years, and no petty jealousies should influence members of his own party in this section to attempt his defeat renomination. Princeton Democrat.

What Becomes of the Enormous Revenues Collected by the Government?

This is an interesting inquiry to the tax payers. During the six years that succeeded the war, from April, 1865, there has been collected from the people by the Administration $2,700,000,000 of taxes. What has become of this enormous sum? Whither has it gone? This Radicals endeavor to create the impression that a goodly share of it has been invested in the payment of the public debt, but the official report of the Register of the Treasury, and his figures tell the story, says that during these six years of peace the public debt has been reduced $294,000,000, and the pensions have amounted to $123,000,00, making, in all, $407,000,000. What has become of the $2,300,000,000? That is a problem which the tax payers would like to have solved.

It is altogether probable that one half of the public debt represents fraud and corruption. How is it, that a large number of those who were connected with Government during the war, and since, have become suddenly wealthy, unless it was in some way drawn from the public Treasury? Radical Senators, commenced their services with the Government, poor, and upon nominally small compensations, have become rich. Grant was poor and now is rich. How did he accumulate his wealth? If he received gifts, they came from those who expected, in some way, to be compensated from the public Treasury. And how is it with Morton, and hundreds of others in our State, who were poor when the war commenced and now are wealthy, or well-to-do in the world. Extravagance, corruption and fraud came in with Radical rule, and they have held their own all through. The greater part of the enormous revenues collected by the Government has gone into the hands of the "loyal." Such is the result of Radical rule.—State Sentinel.

Ember Days.

Last Saturday was the fourth of the Ember days of September, which occur on the first Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, after the feast of Pentecost, after the 14th of September, and after the 13th of December. These days were first set apart by the church in the third century. By some authorities the term is supposed to have been derived from the practice of strewing ashes or embers, which were strewing over the head in token of humility and self-condemnation. Other derivations are given, one of which states the embering days were times and of old chosen and set apart for fasting and prayer for obtaining the fruits of the earth, and to give thanks for the same, whereas at these times they are either sown, sprung up, ensuing in their ripeness, or gathered into a barns. It is also to obtain the grace of the Holy Ghost, when holy orders are given and ministers made. These days are appropriately observed both in the Catholic and Episcopal churches, the books of prayer containg the necessary services.

Great Bee Fight.

From the Jackson (Tenn.) Whig and Tribune of a late date, we gather the following interesting items of the resentment and courage of the honey bee. Capt. Brown, of this city, recently robbed three hives, and Dr. West, a neighbor, robbed four. The bees thus deprived of the fruits of their labor became furious, and uniting, making an army of seven hives, they invaded the premises of Mr Horace Bledsoe, and made a fierce attack on five of his hives.—Bledsoe's bees were taken by surprise, and although outnumbered, fought for their homes with desperation. The battle lasted several hours, and four of Bledsoe's hives were literally destroyed. The invaders were finally repulsed, after being almost annihilated The ground for yards around was black with dead bees. Mr. Bledsoe, although a serious loser, buried the dead warriors with the honors of war. Few of the invaders survived the battle, and from out of five of the defending hives, four were destroyed. It was the bloodiest bee battle on record, and deserves to be handed down to posterity.

The New York Evening Post is disheartened at the recent result of Radical attempts at "reconstruction" of the South. It declares that "the social condition of several districts of the Southern States is worse to-day than at any other time since the surrender of General Lee. There never was so much cause for alarm at the condition of Southern society as there is to-day."

A Beautiful Demon.

In going through the parish prison a few days since, the attention of the reporter was attracted to a young girl, apparently not more than fifteen years of age. She had fair nut brown hair and a complexion fresh and white as milk. The mild blue eyes were singularly soft and intelligent, and her whole appearance indicated the free, joyous characteristic of youth and happiness. Yet this amiable looking creature, this fair, delicate Minerva of slender form and ingenuous face, is said to be a devil incarnate. She was not a prisoner only a visitor to the institution, and when the reporter saw her she was conversing with a noted burglar; indeed, she says she is a cousin of Pete Munday's, and goes under the sobriquet of Lily. She is almost as fair and delicate as one. Her career is a remarkable series of adventures and hair breadth escapes. About a year ago she lived in San Antonio, Texas, and for some or real or fancied misconduct received a severe castigation at the hands of the man with whom she was living. Burning with resentment, and conscious of her inability to cope with him in physical strength she waited until the next night, when he was asleep, and then, locking the doors of the room and closing every avenue of escape, she prepared for a work of horror almost impossible to conceive. On one pretext or another she sent all the inmates of the house away and procuring paper and other inflammable material, built a funeral pyre around the sleeping man. This done she set fire to it, and locking the door behind her fled the house. The man woke up when the house was full of flames, and in escaping from the room was literally roasted. One side of his body was burned almost to a cinder. He has never recovered from his injuries, and is to-day a hopeless invalid, suffering excruciating torture and continual anguish. His generosity—and perhaps, his sense of atonement—prevented his prosecuting the girl, and she made her escape to New Orleans. Arriving there she took apartments on Toulouse street, between Rampart and Burgundy, where she still resides. She is yet very young, certainly not more than 17 at the farthest, and her vindictive and savage fury when excited is a terror to all her acquaintances. It is strange that beneath an exterior so fair and beautiful should be concealed the element of such lawless violence.—N. O. Picayune.

A Member of the Yellowstone exploring expedition writes as follows in a private letter printed in the Cleveland Herald: Up in the heart of the continent, 8,500 feet above the sea, lies one of the loveliest bodies of cold clear water that can be found in the world. Hemmed in on every side by lofty peaks and long rolling benches densely covered with fine timber, it stretches out its fair bosom twenty-five miles to view north and south, and varies in length from five to fifteen miles. It is really, I presume, one of the most perfect pieces of water composition that the earth affords. Below this lake, in the river, are two falls, over 400 feet in height, and the other some 180—a sheer faultless fall in the first case, unbroken to its bottom. The canon below is over 2,000 feet in depth, will always be a wonder to those who may have the good fortune to follow in my steps. The descent in to this canon was made by myself after it was pronounded impossible.

A conflagration recently occurred in the town of Amboy, Ill., which destroyed property to the amount of $200,000. There is a tragic incident connected with this fire. A farmer, named Shannon, living in that region had been sued for a debt of $360. He tendered the sum of $300, which he paid creditor, and offered in the presence of the Court to give good security for the remaining 360 if the suit should be withdrawn; but the proposal was rejected. Angry words ensued, and Shannon was ordered to be committed to jail for contempt of Court. A few hours after the prison doors were locked on the unfortunate man, the fire broke out, and though he cried out to be released when it approached the place of confinement the entreaties and those of the bystanders were unheeded until escape was impossible, and he was allowed to perish in the flames.

The trial of the North Carolina Ku-Klux by a United States Court is no new pretence. The Government is going to an enormous expense in the matter, [illegible] as a matter of intimidation, but to vindicate the action of Congress in passing its Ku-Klux bill.

The city debts of New York and Philadelphia are $175,000,000, or more than half as much as the debts of all the States in the Union. They are double the debt of the United States in the days of President Buchanan.

The Chicago Republican says: We do not believe that General Grant is the first choice of a majority of the people of the United States. There are large numbers of persons, unimpeachable as Republicans, who would greatly prefer another man for President, and who would be willing to see their party beaten—he being the nominee—provided it were done in behalf of some one in whose integrity and good intentions they had reasonable confidence. With such a person for a candidate, General Grant can be defeated."

The residence of Mr. Isaac Scott who resides about five miles east of this place, was entered on Saturday night last, by some thief, who robbed him of forty dollars in money. An entrance was effected through a back door, and the money was taken from Mr. Scott's pantaloons, which were hanging on the post of the bed he was occupying. The contents of the pocket book were entirely overhauled, but nothing taken but the money. Mr. S. informs us that he has no clue that would lead to the discovery of the guilty one. The residence of George Fairchild was also entered in the same way, and the sum of ten dollars taken in the same manner.—Northern Indianian.

Grape Jelly.

Take ripe, jucy grapes, pick them from the stems; put them into a large earthen pan, and smash them with back of a wooden ladle, or with a potato beetle.—Put them into a kettle, without any water and cover them closely, and let them boil for a quarter of an hour, stiring them up occasionally from the bottom. Then squeeze them through a jellybag, and to teach pint of juice allow a pound of loaf sugar. Dissolve the sugar in the grape juice; then put it over a quick fire, in a preserving kettle, and skim it twenty minutes. When it is a clear thick jelly, take it off, put it warm into tumblers, and cover them with double tissue paper cut to fit the inside.

The apple crop is enormous in this vicinity. Many are going to waste for want of care. The ground in many orchards is covered with the fallen fruit, and in many cases stock is turned in to consume them.

Singing School.—The formal opening of the singing school by Prof. Meyer, will take place at the school house to-morrow (Friday) night. Everybody is invited.—The next meeting after this will be the first of the series. Let there be a full attendance to-morrow evening.

According to Tom Taylor, of the Journal, there must have been a very nice Fireman's Ball, there last week. He gives the names of all the dem sweets in the city. We don't believe it, however, but we are certain of one thing, if these creatures were there, Tom was among 'em, sure.

As to the clothing business, crying clothing is going up since the advanced in wax, but the popular Red Front Clothing House are selling goods cheaper than ever. We purchased our winter goods in May when they were very low, and will give our customers the advantage. Come and see us.

Railroad Stock.—W. H. [illegible], Esq., requests us to say that he has received all the certificates of stock in the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. Co., to which all the subscribers are entitled, and would be glad to deliver the same, on presentation of their receipts.

The present style of [illegible] is particularly [illegible] on [illegible], making them [illegible] in the joints, gouty in the feet, not good on the wing, and stiff and rigid generally. As the day advances they seem to get warmed up for business, however, and [illegible] hungry, bite fiercely and [illegible] as often as ever.

Our friends who are building stone and brick work, are informed that we have a fine article of mortar already mixed near our door, which they can have free, gratis, for nothing. As it is mixed by the hogs, and Providence furnished the water directly, it don't cost us anything, and that's why we offer to sell it so cheap. Come along and help yourself. Hogs excluded.

Japan Tea.—We have been presented with a fine article of tea, now offered to the trade by our enterprising grocer, T. B. Totten, Esq. It is, perhaps, the best we have seen for a long time, possessing a fine flavor, and requires but a small quantity at a time, to make the usual amount of tea. Try it, and you will find it superior to the ordinary articles.

In thirty days from the present time it is expected that the Eel River Railroad will be completed from Auburn, in DeKalb county, to Roann, in Miami county, a distance of fifty four miles. D. L. Quirk & Co., have meant business from the beginning. The work has been well done, and the contractors have the praise of having made the best new road ever built in Indiana.—Col. City Post.

Devor, of the LaGrange Standard, attempted to shoot one of the citizens of LaGrange, not long since, and after firing four shots at him with a revolver, ten paces distant, turned and ran like a coward, that he is, and did not come out of his hole for a week. The only excuse given was that he owed the man $500 borrowed money, and he wanted his pay.—Ken. Standard.

The writer of the Butler Herald, which [illegible] paper published at Toledo, with a column or so written from Butler, offers himself in the character of a volunteer. First, he volunteers his name 'Cheek' which certainly stands for that as it has no connection with the article of which it is the caption. We don't propose to go in only where right and conscience dictate, and then we need no backing from high players.

Run-a-way.—We have had a real run-a-way,—regular fright,—all the people bare-headed on the street—dogs barking louder than usual—team dashing at a fearful rate along the street—man tries to stop them—is knocked down for his trouble—team runs over him—every body says he killed—man gets up and brushes his clothes without the least assistance—horses run over a wood-pile—one of them falls and the excitement is at an end. So much for a run-a-way.

Some towns are troubled with old fogies, stingy old fossils and unenterprising, chronic grumbling dog-fennel men. What is the result? The town stands still and becomes a by-word among its progressive neighbors. Auburn has been inflicted this way for many years, but they had a poor chance this year. The place has risen as if from the dead and shaken them off and the consequence is it has grown about one-third larger. Give us some more shake.

Laying of Corner Stone.—The congregation of the Reform Church, at Waterloo, celebrated the laying of the corner stone of their new edifice last Tuesday, with imposing ceremonies. The church is to be a brick, 30 by 50, and is to cost $5,000. The English sermon preached on the occasion was delivered by the Rev. J. G. Noss, of Huntertown, and the German discourse by Rev. [illegible] Sandoe, of this place. The ceremonies were conducted by the masonic fraternity, assisted by the Odd Fellows. Rev. H. Bair is the regular Pastor of the congregation.

Accident.—A young man by the name of Bonner, living about one mile southwest of town, went out to the barn to hitch up a team of horses, but was found sometime after almost lifeless near the stable. Dr. Cambeer was sent for, who found him growing cold and pulseless, but by the application of restoratives he began to revive. It is thought that he was kicked by one of the horses, in the side. A terrible inflamation set in and again his life was threatened, but the Doctor informs us that he is now rapidly recovering.

Change.—The firm heretofore known as Boozer, Blattner & Co., at Waterloo, has been dissolved and Messrs. Boozer & Blattner will continue in the business.—They have a very fine large stock of dry goods, groceries, &c., which they are disposing of at the lowest figures. We are glad to see this change because we are assured that the firm is now composed of gentlemen, obliging and agreeable gentlemen, whom one can approach with the utmost confidence. We believe, and hope, that an increased business will mark their success from the date of this change.

At Bryan.—Quite a number of the unterrified Democracy from this county visited Bryan, Ohio, last Tuesday, to hear Pendleton and Morgan, we among the number. Both speakers were there, and the crowd was immense—estimated at from 8,000 to 10,000. If the people turn out everywhere over the State in this proportion, and heed the truths made known to them on these occasions, we have no fear of the result. Morgan opened in a fine speech, followed by the illustrious Pendleton, who electrified by his eloquence and convinced with his arguments. We called at the Democrat office but Bro. Patterson did not happen to be present.

The Chillicothe Register contains a 'notice to the wives of intemperate men,' asking them to leave their names with the Secretary of the Liquor Dealers' Association, and promising that no liquor shall be sold to them. The dealers take this method to protect themselves from prosecution under the State law giving damages to the wives of men who buy liquor.

Mistake.—We have learned that we [illegible] in our [illegible] "Official [illegible]," some two weeks ago that Mr. Maxwell [illegible] whom we referred, was acting under orders from his superior, and we hasten to make this correction. We have no desire to do injustice to any one, and when we know we have been mistaken, we never shrink from the fair thing by making an ample correction. We [illegible] that he [illegible] his duty faithfully and fearlessly, though we did not think so at the time. But we give him credit now, and attach no blame to the discharge of his duty in this particular case.

Business Change.—F. [illegible], Esq., our popular druggist has disposed of his drug store to A. Totten, Esq., of [illegible]. The [illegible] of last week says:

"Albert Totten, so long and favorably know in this city as a first-class druggist and salesman, intends commencing business for himself at Auburn, DeKalb county—where he will go into the drug business. Mr. Totten has the elements of success, and his many friends in this city will be glad to learn of his achieving it; although they will miss him from the store of Abell & Bro., where he has so long and faithfully served them."

Mr. Davenport will still remain a citizen of our place for the present. While identified with the business interests of our town, he always proved an agreeable gentleman, prompt and enterprising, in his business affairs, and well worthy the esteem and confidence in which he was held.

Sedan Brevities.

Sedan, although not heard from through the columns of our county paper for some time, is yet alive, and lives to help support the best and spiciest sheet ever published in our county—The Courier.

The Evangelical Lutheran Church was dedicated last Sabbath. The Rev. Mr. Wilson, of North Manchester, preached an able sermon which was sublime in its structure, and eloquently delivered to a large concourse of people. The cost of the edifice was $1,700, and the required amount was raised last Sabbath to clear the church from all indebtness.

Mr. Wm. Kiser is now prepared to furnish wagons as cheap as any other man in the county. Mr. Kiser's wagons are manufactured in the best styles, and we solicit for him a liberal patronage.

G. M. C.

Fire.—The residence of Mrs. Henry Schimpff, a few rods south of Lawrence, in this county, was entirely consumed by fire, last Friday, together with nearly all its contents. Mrs. S. was at the time preparing the church near by for the dedication which occurred on the Sunday following, and had left two of her small children at home all safe as she supposed. It caught from the flue and was soon in flames, and so rapid did they spread that nothing was saved from the second story. A few things was taken out from below. All the clothing, of the family was placed up stairs and not a stitch was saved. She has five children, we understand, the oldest a young man, and two girls who are now working abroad. The actual loss cannot be less than $800. From a nice home, she was suddenly cast out into the world, with five children, with scarcely anything to commence life again. Her husband was taken to the insane asylum a few years ago, was finally discharged from there, came home, and in this state is now running over the country.

Our friends around Lawrence certainly have a good chance to display their liberality, and we learn that they are equal to the emergency, as quite a nice sum has already been subscribed.

Valuable Improvements.—Our place is receiving the addition of several fine brick buildings. Treasurer Ryan has his residence about ready for the roof and when completed will make one of the best structures in the city.

The foundation for the fine brick to be erected by C. P. Ralston, Esq., is already completed. This is being built in the same style as Mr. Ryan's, and will add much to this locality.

Auditor McIntyre is erecting several substantial additions to his already handsome property.

T. B. Totten now occupies his fine new brick residence built this summer.

J. W. Case, Esq., is laying the foundation for a fine new business room three stories high, and about a hundred feet long, over his old building, which when completed, will make one of the handsomest store-rooms in the place.

Mr. A. P. Feltz is preparing for the erection of a new frame building, on north Main-st.

The handsome residence of R. Hess, Esq., is now receiving a coat of plaster, and will soon be occupied. This is, perhaps, the finest frame residence that has went up this summer.

The Vincennes Sun wants J. B. Stoll, of the Ligonier Banner, for Lieutenant Govenor. What will Sam Winter, of the Huntington Democrat, and Eli Brown, of the Columbia City Post, say to that?—Warsaw Indianian.

Mr. Stoll has repeatedly declared that he was ineligible on the score of age, and if so, he will, of course not be a candidate. But, Sam Winter will support any democrat that represents principle, and is not merely 'crabbing' for the spoils, for any position. The Indianian will mind that as it goes marching along.—Huntington Democrat.

So far as Eli W. Brown of the Columbia City Post is concerned he always supports the nominees of Democratic Conventions. Our rule is to fight 'spoilsmen,' 'camp-followers' and 'interlopers,' before the nomination, and there defeat them to prevent the contingency of having them defeated by the people at the polls. Our Democratic fall is one of principal; one which controls our action both before and after Conventions. The Indians will also mind that and go marching along.

If W. C. DePaw does not get the Democratic nomination for governor of this State it certainly won't be the fault of the 'Fat Boy,' of the Ligonier Banner. If persistent blowing for a man is the way to win, then Jonny's candidate ought to be nominated. Our 'Schneider' county friend sometimes over-leaps himself.—Col. City Post.

TO JOHNNY HAY.

[illegible]

'Tain't Orthodox, but I can't help then,
I don't know how, but I know
That there ain't [illegible] for [illegible],

And I'd rather die in a [illegible]

In Something through the clouds.

And so, John Hay, I really don't see
Wherein you're very far wrong:
You can't forget He was a man on earth
And it crops out in your song;
And if He had love and [illegible]

On the man that [illegible] like you.

Prepare.—The time is near at hand when stoves will be needed to furnish the necessary caloric, and consequently the season of fires is about to begin. Now, what would we do, my countrymen, if the wooden block was to get to burning, and no water to put it out. Don't know. There being no means at present on hand to quench a fire, it would have to burn, and all hands put to work saving the contents. And this might all occur from a small fire that could be easily controlled, if we had even limited means in such cases. If we had an engine, it would be of no service, because we have no water facilities.—Then does it not seem important that this should be attended to at once. If a fire should occur within the next week resulting in the destruction of property, would not our town authorities receive a severe rebuke for their tardiness and indifference in this matter, when the catastrophe might have been prevented by the prompt discharge of their duty? We hope that Providence will bear with them a little longer in this line until they give us means to fight the firey element.

IN MEMORIA.

At a regular meeting of Butler Lodge, 282 I. O. O. F., of Butler, Indiana, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in his wise Providence to take from our midst our worthy sister Sarah Greenamyer, wife of brother John Greenamyer, therefore

Resolved, That in our bereavement we have lost a dear, much beloved, faithful and kind sister, a warm hearted and generous friend.

Resolved, That although to us darkness and mystery encompasses the removal of one so young whose life seemed full of usefulness, yet in deepest humility we recognize the hand of our Divine Master who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the husband and parents, Brothers and sisters in the loss of Sarah, and invoke the Divine Blessing, in this their great affliction.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect our Lodge Room shall be draped in mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the Butler Herald, Waterloo Press, and Auburn Courier, and that a copy be presented to the husband, parents, brothers and sisters of the deceased.

Packing Down Butter.—Mrs Lee, of Blooming Grove, Ind., writes to the Cincinnati Gazette: In the first place I get a stone jar large enough to hold what butter I wish to pack down. In churning I am particular to work all the buttermilk out of the butter. I then pack it in a jar solid and place a cloth over the butter, which I cover with salt an inch thick. A thicker paper is now tied over the jar.—When I churn again I take off the paper and raise the cloth, salt and all, and pack in the butter, and then replace the cloth with the salt on it as before. And so on until my jar is full. Then I make it air tight by tying thick paper over it. I have kept butter preserved in this way six months, sweet and nice.

THE NEWS.

A Dubuque lady, by mistake, recently swallowed a draught of hair oil mixed with cantharides. Her condition was critical.

Madame Pauline Mendy, the equestrienne of Barnum's circus, was thrown from her carriage as the cortege entered Rome N. Y., the other day, and was killed.

Davy Brown, of Louisville, Ky., a small boy accidentally shot his sister in play at a dance, the other night. She was not expected to live.

A twelve-year-old-boy in Cincinnati stole a trunk full of his sister's clothing and $700 of his papa's money and ran away with his sweetheart aged eleven.

An old colored woman in Albany died suddenly a few days ago from fright at the choking of a child in her charge, who had swallowed a teapot lid.

An elderly dame in Lancaster, England while smoking her customary pipe in bed the other night, accidentally set the bed curtains on fire and perished in the flames.

In the town of Windom Minn., a few days ago, a daughter of Mr. Eastman, ten years of age, was bitten by a rattlesnake on her little toe which resulted in her death on the fifth night following. Skillful medical aid was called to her relief but to no purpose.

Beware of Counterfeits.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All persons should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to one house in Fort Wayne this fall. Best goods and lowest prices.

Gov. Baker still holds on to his five thousand dollar rent. What a precious "Old Honesty"! If the people of Indiana ever get a chance at him again, they will change that talisman and make it read "Old Skinflint."

Storing Potatoes.

As the time has arrived for potatoes to be harvested, I wish to say to those who have them to harvest, to put them in [illegible] best mode of disposing of them. There are those who have tried this for years, and cannot be persuaded to keep their potatoes in any other way. Dig and expose to the air until dry; then put up as directed, taking the barrels to the field. Store in the cellar any part most convenient. The advantage is that the [illegible] open [illegible] always [illegible] potato odor. You have nothing of this. Another advantage: you can put where most convenient and more at pleasure with little difficulty, and you may place tier upon tier of barrels till up to the floor. When it is wished to use any, a barrel is opened and used, and [illegible] the rest leaving [illegible] the ground remaining in the barrel. Or if it is wished to sell they are ready put up. Any barrel will do so that it is strong enough—a salt barrel is as good as any.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Storing Winter Apples.

A correspondent of Rural Life who claims to have extended experience is "decidedly of the opinion" that apples keep far better when put into close barrels or boxes, and secluded as much as possible from the air. When thus stored, he says they will come out in the spring full and plump as when taken from the tree. Many varieties—the Talman Sweet, Spitzenburg, and those kinds that are not considered as long keepers, and shrivel badly, will do well treated in this way. I have, he continues, found universally that they keep better to let them lie without picking over. It is much better to pile them into a large bin across the the cellar, say six or seven feet high and four or five feet wide, and cover them up tight, than to lay them on shelves. I once saw such a bin that a man had kept through the winter. About the first of April he thought he would open the windows on the side of the cellar next to the bin to let in the air, that they might keep better. I was at his place and he called my attention to the fact. Two windows over the bin were opened about ten days or two weeks, and the apples exactly opposite the windows about one-third, rotted for as much as a foot in depth, and that the remaining part on either side were not rotted at all. Another instance: A neighbor of mine had about five hundred bushels in a pile in a cellar. As they became a little specked he commenced picking them over; when about half done he got tired and concluded to let them go. When marketed about six weeks after, found that one-third of those picked over were not fit for market, while all but one twentieth of the others were good. This I have seen in numerous instances. If you wish to try the experiment, make a box, as tight as a carpenter can make it, and when picking from the orchard, fill it and make it fast. Let it lie in the orchard till it is in danger of freezing; then put it in the cellar. Put the same quantity on the shelves for trial. I am pretty sure one experiment will convince.

What is a Million Dollars.

People say, "The steamer took away a million dollars," just as complacently as though a million dollars could be picked up like dirt. An anonymous writer remarks that but few people have any more idea what a million, billions and trillions are than they have of the brogans worn by the cobblers who inhabit the moon. A million of silver dollars possesses a vastness that is rather [illegible] this sum [illegible] five hun[illegible] eight h[illegible] nearly [illegible] months. If the dollars were laid side by side, they would reach [illegible] miles, while [illegible] transportation would require [illegible] tons each. [illegible] millions [illegible] overpo[illegible] [illegible] with larger [illegible] seconds in six thousand years seems almost incalculable, and yet they amount to less than one-fifth of a trillion. A quadrillion of leaves of paper, each the the two hundredth part of an inch in thickness, would form a pile the height of which would be three hundred and thirty times the moon's distance from the earth. A cannon ball flies swiftly, if one were fired at the moment that one of our National Presidents takes his seat in the White House, and were it to continue with unabated velocity of twelve hundred feet a second during his whole term of office, it would not travel three millions of miles. We never hear of the Wandering Jew, but we mentally inquire what was the sentence of his punishment. Perhaps he was told to walk [illegible] he counted a trillion. Suppose a man to count one in every second of time, day and night without stopping to rest or sleep, it would take him thirty two years to count a billion, or thirty thousand years to count a trillion, even as the French understand that term. As we said before, what a limited idea men have the immensity of numbers.

There are now Sixty-eight colleges open for women in the United States. Surely they can now be educated without the consent of Yale, Harvard or Michigan University.

The New Orleans Picayune reports the most encouraging prospects from all parts of Louisiana for the growing sugar crop. If the latter portion of the year proves favorable for cutting and grinding, it is thought that a yield of 225,000 hogsheads may be expected.

A wealthy Englishman is making a tour of America on foot. He recently walked from Boston to Niagara falls in [illegible] carrying a valise of fifty pounds in weight strapped to his back. He prefers to see this country on foot, as he can then give a full description to his friends. He is now on his way to San Francisco.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their [illegible] Curative [illegible] Fancy [illegible] Poor [illegible] Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters [illegible] unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, [illegible]

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

[illegible] Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

How to Get Rich.

A couple of uneducated but apparently well-to-do Boston men, in active business, on Laturday last came together upon a busy street corner, where for a few minutes they had a red hot chat over some trivial business matter. The pith of the thing was this: One had been doing something for the other, and to get even for his work had sent in a bill which was regarded as too steep. After a little savage and rather profane talk, the man who had done the work straightened himself out and sugared the thing off into a bit of 'loud' philosophy, and in a very cool but dignified manner said to him interrogatively—'Well, ain't it better to be a d—d hog and get pay for what you do, than to be a good fellow and get kicked from pillar to post?' If that remark don't contain, in a nutshel, the secret of success in business then what does?

A Kentuckian, whose wood pile had suffered from frequent depredations, bored holes in some of the logs and plugged them up with powder. A neighbor recognized the next day, when his stove went whizzing through the kitchen window.

The editor of an Indianapolis paper, having received a bank-note detecter, returns thanks, and modestly asks for some bank notes up on which to test its accuracy.

Fond father, "I see ye've put my son inter grammar and jography. Noo, as I neither mean him tae be a minster or a sea captain, its o' nae use. Gie him a plain bisness eddication."

WISHING.

Of all the amusements of the mind,
From logic down to fishing,
There isn't one that you can find
So very cheap as 'wishing.'
A very choice diversion, too,
If we but rightly used it,
And not, as we are apt to do,
Pervert it and abuse it.

I wish, a common wish indeed,
My purse was somewhat fatter,
That I might cheer the child of need,
And not my pride to flatter!
That I might make oppression reel,
As only gold can make it,
And break the tyrant's rod of steel,
As only gold can break it.

I wish, that sympathy and love,
And every human passion
That has its origin above,
Would come and keep in fashion;
That scorn, and jealousy, and hate,
And every base emotion,
Were buried fifty fathoms deep
Beneath the waves of the ocean.

I wish, that friends were always true,
And motives always pure;
I wish the good were not so few,
I wish the bad were fewer.
I wish that parsons ne'er forgot
To heed their pious teaching;
I wish that practicing was not
So different from preaching.

I wish, that modest worth might be
Appraised with truth and candor,
I wish that innocence were free
From treachery and slander;
I wish that men their vows would mind;
That women never were rovers;
I wish that wives were always kind,
And husbands always lovers.

Newspaper writers will thoroughly appreciate the following clever tale, which we take from the Philadelphia Dispatch:

A week or two ago one of our reporters had occasion to refer to a certain woman, whom we will call Hanna Smith, as a denizen of the Eleventh Ward. A day or two afterward a huge man entered the office with his brow clothed with thunder. In his hand he carried a fearful club, and at his side trotted a bull dog whom hunger evidently had made desperate. With that quick appreciation of the situation which is credible to the superior intelligence of educated men, the editor of this paper and the proprietors darted to the window climbing outside, slid down the lightning rod and went across the street to watch the bloody fray through a spy glass. With the fearlessness of conscious innocence we sat still, merely inserting our legs in two sections of stove pipe, to guard against any misapprehension of facts on the part of the bull dog. The man with the club approached.

'Are you the editor?' he asked, spitting on his hand and grasping his club. We told him that the editor was out; that he had gone to north pole with Capt. Hall, and that he would not return before 1876, in time for the centenial celebration.

'Are you the proprietor?' asked the man.

We explained to him that we were not that the proprietors were also out; that they had gone to South America for the purpose of investigating the curative properties of cundurango, and they expected to remain there for several years.

'Well, whoever you are,' exclaimed the warrior, 'my name is Smith!'

We told him we were glad; because, if there was one thing better than the possession of the name of Smith, it was the privilege of knowing a man of that name.

'But Smith,' we said, 'Why this battle array? It is absurd for a man to put on the panoply of war, and frisk into editors' sanctums fumbling a club and accompanied by a disheartened bull dog, simply because his name happens to be Smith.'

He said he called in to burst the head of the man who had insulted his sister.

'It is impossible, Smith, that such a thing could have been done by any one in this office.'

'Is, but it was, though; and her name was published, too. Miss Smith—Miss Hannet Smith.'

'May we be permitted to inquire, Mr Smith, what was the precise character of the affront offered to Hannah?'

'Well, you see,' said Smith, 'the blackguard said she was a denizen. And I want you to understand,' exclaimed Smith becoming excited, and brandishing his club in a wild manner over our head, while the bulldog advanced and commenced to sniff up and down our stove pipe—'I want you to understand that she is a decent young woman, with a good character, and none of your denizen and such truck. The man who says she is a denizen is a blackguard and theif, and I'll smash him over the nose if I get a chance. They may say what they please about me, but them who abuses my sister has got to suffer.' And Smith struck the table in a violent manner with his club, while the bulldog put his fore legs on the back of our chair.

We pacified Smith with a dictionary. We pointed out to that raging warrior that the Websterian definition of the word 'denizen' gives such a person an nonoffending character, and deprives the term of everything like reproach. Smith said he was satisfied, and he shook hands and kicked the bulldog down stairs. The editor and proprietors, seeing that all was safe, immediately climbed the lightning rod and soon appeared at the window, where they were introduced to Smith, with the remark that they had returned from the North Pole and the clime of the cundurango somewhat unexpectedly, in order to surprise their relations.

And now we suppose Smith will be mad because we have told this storry about him, and he will be coming nown to interview us again in war's magnificent stern array with a fresh bulldog. But it will be in vain. We have rented an offic in the top of the shot-tower, and have planted torpedoes and spring guns all the way up the stairs. We warn this incendiary Smith to beware.

A passenger on an Ohio railroad, aroused from a serene slumber by the tooting of a whistle, exclaimed petulantly, 'The train has caught up with these cattle again.'

'Madam, a great many persons were disturbed at the concert last night by the crying of your baby.' Well, I do wonder that such people will go to concerts!'

Two men and a woman in Easton, Pa., are accused of whipping a little boy eight years old with a heavy iron wire, of branding him on the back with a hot iron, and of compelling him to hold live coals in his hands until the flesh and muscles were scorched and shriveled. They are in jail. The poor boy is the son of the woman by a husband now dead, and it is alleged that she had been the most active in inflicting upon her child the horrid cruelties he has endured.

At one of Peter Cartwright's campmeetings he was much annoyed by a noisy sister, who 'took part' more frequently than was acceptable. He had called upon all to kneel while some one should lead in prayer. She struck off at once with much feeling and power. Cartwright not recognizing her voice, shouted out 'Amen.' A brother kneeling close by whispered, 'It's Ann Jordan praying.'—Cartwright, looking round and seeing that it was so, cried, 'I take that amen back.'

There is a man out in Wyoming who did not want for woman's wife when forced to do woman's work while his wife was on the jury. He appealed to her to come home but she wasn't in any particular hurry, as 'he would now find out how fine it was to stay at home and mind the children, while she was loafing around the court house as he used to do.' The man went home and hired a good looking cook and sent his wife word to be sure and not come home until she wanted to on his account, but as soon as the news reached her she bolted immediately and is now one of the loudest opposers of female suffrage.

How to Waltz.

As to waltzing, there's no doubt at all about its being pleasant. The difficulty lies in executing the manœuvre. The mode of execution adopted by one party, at least, is perfectly simple, and many be practiced with impunity by any one.

'How is it,' said one swell, who never could please the damsels, to another, who was immensely popular—'how is it that all the women want to waltz with you, and say that no one can waltz so well? How do you manage it?'

To which the swell replied, 'Why my dear fellow, I just hold them and let them and let them kick!'

A Virginia Judge's Opinion of Editors.

The recent death of the venerable Judge Leigh has revived many anecdotes connected with his long and eventful life.—Among them is the following:

When Judge Leigh's court was in session in Lynchburg, a number of years ago, it so happened that Mr. James McDonald, the present secretary of the commonwealth breakfasted alone with him for several mornings in succession. Conversation ensued, without an introduction, and the judge was so favorably impressed by his companion that he at last asked him his name.

'McDonald.'

'Not the editor of the Lynchburg Virginian?'

'The same.'

Virginia editors, just at the time, were not making themselves particularly agreeable to men of Judge Leigh's tastes, so he turned to McDonald and said bluntly:

'You must excuse me, sir, but I can hardly believe you are an editor, you have the manners of a gentleman.'

Cigars and Economy.

'Father do you remember that mother asked you for two dollars this morning?

'Yes, my child, what of it?'

'Do you remember that mother did not get the two dollars?'

'Yes. And I remember what little girls don't think about.'

'What is that, father?

'I remember that we are not rich. But you seem to be in a brown study. What is my daughter thinking about?'

'I was thinking how much one cigar costs.'

'Why, it costs ten cents—not two dollars, by a long shot.'

'That's as true as the multiplication table.'

'And there are seven days in a week.'

'That's so by the Almanac.'

'And seven times thirty cents are two hundred and ten cents.'

'Hold on. I'll surrender. Here, take the two dollars to your mother, and tell her that I'll do without cigars for a week.'

'Thank you, father, but if you would only say for a year. It would save more than a hundred dollars. We would all have shoes and dresses, and mother a nice bonnet, and lots of pretty things.'

'Well, to make my little girl happy, I will say a year.'

'Oh! that will be so nice! But wouldn't it be about as easy to say always? Then we could have the money every year, and your lips would be so much sweeter when you kiss us.'

THE BEAUTIFUL STORY.

It was just in the shadow of the ruined walls, which towered above the blue shining waters of the river, and where, when the tide was high, dropped down the long trailing ivy vine to kiss the laughing waves—there sat two women.

One, with her arms resting upon a broken column, her dark eyes with the memory of long ago staring their brilliancy into life, gazed afar out at the floating cloud, her face a sad reflection of the past; while the other, many years younger, half knelt at her feet, and with a smile on her red lips and the light of hope in her glorious eyes, played with the light moss on the bank beside her.

It was a perfect picture, for the twilight crept in and swept across the foreground just enough to bring the wonderous beauty into relief.

To the artist eyes of Ralph Bertram, who, wandering down the river bank, came upon them, it was perfect harmony of light and shade, an exact subject for a masterpiece, and there he sat down and sketched until the darkness shrouded the whole and shut it out from his view.

He too his sketch home, and for hours sat and gazed at it, enraptured with the glorious beauty of the faces. Who were they, or rather, who was she? Who was the girl with her dreamy, happy face, and dark, melting eyes, with their hopefullness and truth?

When morning dawned, he went down again to the river's bank and watched and waited for hours, but they never came. He inquired of every passer, but no one knew them. One would say:

'Ah! yes, I have seen them—two women, one old and sad, the other, young and happy. I do not know their names.' Another would declare he never was aware of their existence, and thus Ralph found his search a vain one. He went on, working day and night upon his picture, and at last when it was completed, and he went up to his studio in the city, and placed it there, his friends held up their hands in admiration and worshipped it, and before many days it found a place in the most renowned art gallery, and all the world went crazy over it.

Thus Ralph Bertram became celebrated, and orders came upon him faster than he could fill them, and all the wealth and beauty in the city smiled upon him and petted him. He was admitted into every parlor, soiree and reception; he became the lion of the season, and far and near his praises were sung. But to him it was nothing when thinking of his beloved picture, and hour after hour he sat gazing upon that beautiful face like one entranced.

'I believe, Mr. Bertram, that you are positively in love with that young face!' said a belle, as she came upon him in the gallery. 'Was it from life or your own imagination that you painted it?'

'From life.'

'Im ossible! It must have been a dream! No living woman was ever blessed with such beauty.'

'Yes, one.'

The lady went away, and before night one-half the town was jealous of his picture and declared him crazy. It must be so, for no woman ever possessed such rare beauty. It was a dream, and hallucination.

Bertram heard it and laughed. Perchance the day might come when he could bring his wondrous beauty before them and convince them, and with this hope he labored and he sought her far and wide.

It was a cold, bitter night, and around corners the wind swept, bringing with it fitful gusts of hard-cutting sleet, and penetrating to the bone ever unfortunate who chanced to be abroad. Bertram came briskly down the street from his studio, warmly wrapped in heavy coat and furs, with a vision of his pleasant rooms before him, and lightly humming an opera. He had turned from the principal street, and was walking alone where all was quiet, when he suddenly came upon two women, who stood near the iron railing in front of a house.

'Mother,' said one, 'it is but little further. Do try to keep up. Here, lean upon me, mother, mother!'

She was vainly trying to support the sinking from but not all her strength could prevent her form falling. And Bertram sprang forward in time to receive her in his strong arms as she fell back.

'Mother, O, my mother!' was the despairing cry.

'Don't be alarmed, Miss! She has only fainted. My home is here, close at hand, and if you will assist me I will take your mother there.'

The young woman obeyed him without a word, and with her assistance, Ralph bore the senseless form to his elegant apartments. There was no light within the room, and after placing the inanimate form upon the sofa, he groped his way to the match safe and lighted the gas. As the soft radiance shone through the room he sprang back with an exclamation of surprise and delight. His picture! The face of his idolized one! At the sound the younger started up and looked towards him. How beautiful she was, with her hood falling back and the damp waves of chestnut hair cling to her broad, white forehead, and great lustrous eyes fixed upon him in wonder. Bertram could not speak.

'My mother!' she began with quivering lips.

'Pardon me! I forgot myself!' and he went out and brought wines, and cordials, and labored until the blood stole back in the dark eyes opened For several moments she did not seem to understand the strange room and surrounding; but when the younger spoke, she said:

'Agnes, darling!'

'Mother, are you better?'

'Yes, yes!'

Bertram sat in the window until they called him. The elder one was standing in the room, the mantle thrown around her and one hand resting upon the shoulder of her daughter.

'I wish to bid you good night and thank you for your kindness. If it were in my power I would—'

'Madam, I beg you to sit down. I have spent months in searching for you. I beg you that I have found you to remain here. If you are willing to confer a favor upon me, remain here, for the night, at least.'

'Searching for us! What do you mean?'

'You will learn our day. I owe you all I possess.'

She sat back, seemingly petrified with astonishment.

'Who are you? I never met you! You owe me nothing!'

'Will you remain here?'

'Yes, if you need us.'

After a time the noble looking woman sat in a comfortable chair near the grate, her lovely daughter at her feet, and Ralph Bertram brought forth the sketch and told the story.

'And are you the great painter, Ralph Bertram,' she answered musingly.

'And the great picture of which we have read, was only poor mamma and I sitting upon the bank of that beautiful river in the country where we visited last summer. How strange!'

Agnes LaGrange was happy and contented in the splendid room, and with her head resting upon her mother's lap heard the story of her father's death, the flight across the sea from France, their struggles and hardships, and their utter loneliness; and she smiled when Ralph Bertram begged them to accept his friendship.

The art gallery was crowded, and all the fashion of the city was out and promenading up and down the grand saloon, and passing before Bertram's picture to admire and compliment. All at once there was a buzz, and the crowd parted on either side. Down the opening came Bertram with a lady leaning on each arm, as he passed, a murmur went around:

'The face is in his picture.' How beautiful! How perfect!'

Ralph was never happier nor prouder than when he stood with his fair companion and heard their words of praise, and when Agnes whispered:

'It is grand, Ralph, and I am proud of you.'

'My darling, your praise is worth more than all else to me,' he answered, and he pressed her hand tenderly, and looked into the dark eyes, worshipping her glorious beauty with all his heart.

Once more the world gathered to envy an admire, when Agnes and the famous artist stood before the altar in the church, and were made one.

The great picture brought him a fortune, and the orginal brought him comfort and peace.

A STARTLING PHENOMENA IN FLORIDA.

Large Portion of Orange County Changed to a Lake. Trees, Houses and People Ingulfed.

(From the Cincinnati Enquirer, September [illegible].)

Our New York special, in the Enquirer of the 19th, gave an extract from a letter received from Georgia, about a terrible phenomenon in Florida—the sinking of large bodies of land, and the formation of a large lake where there was land but a few hours before. We find in the Savannah Republican of the 16th more detailed particulars, which we give below. Says the Republican:

The last Herald has a letter from Orange County, Florida, containing a thrilling narrative of the sinking of a good portion of Orange County and the formation of a lake where it once stood. After relating the experience of one man, he goes to another, whose account is as follows:

More and more wonderful. Mr Alex. K. Foster has just come in with more marvelous and startling reports. He says that on his way from Orlando to Mellonville, after crossing Fort Mellon branch he left the road to avoid the constant bogging to which he was subjected. The safest place he thought would be on the crown of a high black jack ridge, running parallel with the road, which he accordingly took. After riding perhaps a mile his horse commenced bogging, and for some distance it was questionable whether he could get through. He however reached more solid footing; again he commenced bogging; at this time he noticed remarkable and [illegible] sounds in his rear. The bogging grew worse as he progressed, until he had to dismount; there seemed no escape for him; both he and his horse were still bogging. The sounds in his rear increased more and more, and became more and more alarming, and the route in front more boggy—he dare not stop, as this would have rendered it impossible to have extricated himself—he neither dare nor could look behind him; his whole thought and aim was to reach terra firma. At last after most superhuman exertions, both he and his horse exhausted to the most extreme degree reached solid ground. Turning to examine into the cause of the fearful sounds in his rear, he saw the most terrific and appalling sight. The first thing that attracted attention was that the trees were moving, first a gyratory motion of the top, then some sinking gradually out of sight, the [illegible] revolving more and more rapidly as it sunk and disappeared, others following, and as they fell revolving and describing areas of a circle against the sky. Then the whole earth, as far the eye could reach, sinking, and its place supplied by a sea of waters, foaming, seething, boiling with the noise of mighty cataracts, and ever and anon coming to the surface the roots, tops, bodies of mighty pines and oaks.

If I could only tell it to you in the language of the awe-stricken witness! It must have been beyond comparison the most fearfully appalling and awe inspiring sight ever witnessed. The horse and man now lie panting at the memory of the horrors they have so miraculously escaped.

An hour and a half later people are rushing from the verge of [illegible]. One camp is crowded with the terror-stricken inhabitants from the country in our rear. Every body is waiting the forebodings and horrible expectations.

They believe the day of Judgment has come. This extraordinary phenomenon appears more and more extraordinary. The country from two to three miles from here to Lake Metlin is entirely submerged, and is now one vast lake. Nothing authoritative from beyond, though rumors are rife that Orlando is swallowed up and the whole chain of lakes to Lake Conway are now united and form an immense inland sea. We leave immediately and in terror for our own fate.

In haste yours, A. F. STURGES.

Bound to do a Full Day's Work.

Mr. M., of Oxford, don't object to having a hired man to do a full day's work, or at least so we judge from the following story: A short time ago a man went to his place for work. Mr. M. set him plowing around a forty acre field. After he had plowed faithfully all day, he expressed his opinion that it was about time to quit work.

"Oh no," said Mr. M. "you can plow around six or eight times more just as well as not."

So the hired man plowed around six or eight times, then went to the house, took care of his team, milked ten cows, ate his supper and found ten o'clock staring him in the face from the old time piece.

Said the hired man to Mrs. M., "where is Mr. M.?"

The good woman answered, "he has retired; do you wish to see him?"

He replied he did. After being conducted to the bed-room, he said "Mr. M., where is the axe?"

"Why," said Mr. M., "what do you want to do with the axe?"

"Well" said the hired man, "I thought you might like me to split wood till breakfast is ready."

A wag, observing on the door of a house the names of two physicians, remarked that it put him in mind of a double-barreled gun—if one missed, the other would be sure to kill.

An old lady reading an account of a distinguished old lawyer, who was said to be the father of the New York bar, exclaimed: "Poor man he had a dreadful set of children!"

A chemist asserts that if tea be ground like coffee, before hot water is poured upon it, it will yield nearly double the amount of exhilirating qualities. Another writer says if you put a piece of lump sugar, the size of a walnut, into a teapot, you will make the tea infuse in half the time.

The yellow leaf tell us that autumn has commenced searing the green foliage of summer. The ripening fruit too plainly indicates that we should commence to prepare for the howling blasts of winter, filling our garners, that, when the white mantle hides earth's beautiful face, we may sit comfortably, unheeding the tempest that may rage without.

What becomes of the gold? The world had a pretty fair supply of the precious metal, from sources not yet exhausted, before our American mines were discovered. Since then we have added $1,200,000,000 to the general stock, and Austrilia has also contributed some hundreds of millions; but these enormous reinforcements are not seen, either in circulation or in the hoards of the bankers. Where do they go?

Many persons are affected with nervousness, so that the least annoyance greatly agitates them, and when they stretch out their hands they shake like aspen leaves on windy days. By the daily moderate use of the blanched stalks of celery as a salad, they may become as strong and steady in limbs as other persons. Every one engaged in labor weakening to the nerves, or addicted with palpitation of the heart, should use celery daily in season, and onions instead when not in season.

Secretary Boutwell's Cincinnati speech was fully prepared in the Treasury and printed at the Department at the expense of the Government. Proof slips of the same were mailed in advance to the principal administration papers in the country. Clerks also were engaged for a week in copying portions of it, and preparing tables for the same. From the labor and time expended on it the Secretary evidently thinks it is a strong document.

The Albany Argus pictures the Radical Convention in New York: "Twice the police of Syraduse had to take posession of the Radical Convention to keep the peace between the two factions contending for the privelege of taxing tithing and pilaging the loyal and patient citizens of the State. Gangs of the hirelings confronted each other on the stage, and howled accusations and imprecations at their adversaries. The accusations were direct charges of fraud, dishonesty, peculations, perjury, bribery and outright robbery; and the worst of all was, each side knew that the other spoke the truth."

The Richmond (Virginia) State Journal, organ of the Republican party, in its issue of the 23rd instant, comes out square in favor of repudiating the interest on the State dept for the two years now next ensuing. It says that the revenues will not suffice to pay the $2,000,000 of interest due and also maintain the school system; that the people cannot bear any further taxation, and that the schools should be preferred to the public creditors. Some question will naturally present itself as to the value of a teaching whose first lesson is to be one of dishonor. But the State authorities claim that the public revenues will be found sufficient for the public needs.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, (Administration Republican) positively asserts that the man chiefly responsible for the corruption in New York city politics is ex-Governor Fenton. Reviewing the condition of the city under the rule of a Republican Legislature, the Advertiser says: "All worked well until that trader and polluter in politics, Reuben E. Fenton, removed good men and placed corrupt ones in their places. All the monstrous evils that have grown up in this city can be traced from the hour he took possession of the executive chamber at Albany. He bargained, he sold, he signed tax levies. He was the tool of Tweed and Sweeney for a consideration just as much as any rotten member of the Legislature."

According to Postmaster General Creswell, the postal department is gradually approaching a self-sustaining basis. Last year its deficiency was three million dollars, which had to be provided for in the deficiency appropriated bill. For the present year it is estimated that the deficiency will not exceed one million dollars.

Now that New Mexico has given 2,000 Democratic majority and elected a Legislature which is strongly Democratic, we shall watch with some interest the course which the Radicals will persue in relation to the admission of the Territory as a State, and as she has heretofore been in the habit of giving 2,000 Republican majority, the Radicals had fixed upon a plan to admit her, thus secure three additional electoral votes. The new sister was to be christened "Lincoln." But there is a change and the Radicals will have to trump up some excuse for keeping her out, or the Democrats will gain two Senators and three electoral votes. We venture the prediction the Territory will not be admitted.—Logport Argus.

The Rich Farmer's Folly.

James Huchinson is an Englishman of considerable wealth, who for twenty years has lived at Fort Wayne, where he owns many acres of land. In 1851 he left England and came to this country to speculate in lands and farms. Fort Wayne was then only a settlement, but with many natural advantages, which attracted Mr. Hutchinson's notice. He made a bit in his speculation. Mr. Hutchinson in the mean time returned to England to buy land, and with the intention, if his speculation there proved successful, to sell out here and return to his native land. Mr. Hutchinson bought 500 acres of the land in Curberland, England, and left this farm in the care of a reliable man and returned to this country. He soon disposed of land here at a good price. Wishing to be in England when the harvest was gathered, he resolved to cross the Atlantic. He got a draft for $5,000 on Jay Cooke & Co., payable in New York, and took the Pennsylvania Central Railroad for Jersey City, where he arrived on the 6th of April last. As he stepped out of the car, dressed as an old-fashion English gentleman, he was accosted by an unknown man.

This duke of argyle's nephew. 'Isn't this Mr. Hutchinson from Fort Wayne?' said the unknown.

'It is, sir,' replied the Englishman with a polite bow.

'You must pardon me,' replied the stranger, 'for taking the liberty to speak to you. I may as well introduce myself to you at once. My name is William Percy. I'm a nephew of the Duke of Argyle, and I'm going back to old England to-morrow in the City of Brooklyn.'

'Ah! I'm glad to meet you, Mr. Percy,' Mr. Hutchinson said; 'we shall be companions, as I go in the same steamer. I'm glad to see a scion of the illustrious Argyle family.'

They went aboard the ferry boat and talked about English matters and the Argyle family. Mr. Percy was no admirer of this country, and said vehementry, 'Give me English life with brown stout.'

Mr. Hutchinson said he had a better opinion of his country.

'By the way, Mr. Hutchinson, have you bought your passage ticket?' asked Mr. Percy.

'No,' answered Mr. Hutchinson, 'and I've got $5,000 draft on Jay Cooke & Co., which I must get exchanged for sovereigns before I leave.'

'Why, I declare, I'm in the same predicament, for I've got one on the same firm for $3,000. I think that's the amount,' said Mr. Percy while drawing from his breast pocket a small portemonaie and exhibiting a draft. The boat had now reached the Liberty street slip. Mr. Percy hailed a hack and whispred something to the driver.

The hack started off at a rapid pace and went through many streets, finally stopping at an office kept by the notorious, Charles Moore, brother of ex-Alderman Moore, in Canal street. Mr. Hutchinson and his friend stepped out and went into Moor's office which was neatly furnished, and had the appearance of respectability. Mr. Percy advised his friend to buy a belt for the safety of his gold, and said that he could get his draft exchanged there and do ten per cent, better than elsewhere. Mr. Hutchinion assented. A belt was shown to him. It was made of buckskin, with straps, and had ten pockets. Moore represented to Mr. Hutchinson that he was an agent for the Inman steamship line, and would get a passage ticket for him at short notice. While Mr. Percy was entertaining Mr. Hutchinson, Moore hurried down to the Inman office in Broadway and bought a first cabin passage in Mr. Hutchinson's name. Moore soon returned with the ticket. Mr. Hutchinson was convincend in his mind that all was right, and his friend Percy's assurance removed all doubt. Hutchinson endorsed the draft, and saw the gold counted out before him and placed in the pockets of the belt. Moore kindly volunteered to strap the belt on Mr. Hutchinson's person, as he had never seen one of these things before, and did not know how they operated. To come out in front of the counter it was necessary to go into a small room, divided from the office by a partition. A door in front of the counter led into the store.

The old belt game. In this back room there was another belt, similar to the one purchased by Mr Hutchinson. In the first row of pockets there were £170 of genuine gold; in the other pockets there was lead to make up the weight.

While Moore went through this room with the belt containing the genuine gold he exchanged it for the spurious one, which was soon strapped around Mr. Hutchinson's breast. The latter also paid $83 for his passage ticket, and was then driven to the Clarendon.

Henry McDermott, alias Perry, hurried to Jay Cooke & Co.'s banking house and had the draft cashed. Mr. Hutchinson sailed the next day in the City of Brooklyn. Mr. Hutchinson did not examine the belt until he arrived at Penhurst, when to his amazement he discovered how badly he had been swindled. He consulted Mr. R. Allen the agent there of Inman line, and Mr. Allen sent him to Liverpool, where he stated his case to Mr. Inman. He was advised to get back, so as to appear against the rascals, and Mr. Inman gave him a free pass for the round trip. Mr. Hutchinson returned in the City of Brooklyn, and was quartered at the Clarendon.

A complaint was made to Capt. Thorne, and the case was placed in the hands of Detective Freeman. The officers knew well who the swindlers were. The facts were also told to Mr. Willy Wallach, Emigrant Commissioner, who has taken a deep interest in it, and has been indefatigable in trying to have the swindler brought to justice. Mr. Cassidy was ordered to direct the Castle Garden detective to use his best efforts to capture the rascals. Up to yesterday no arrests had been made and knowing ones said that if there had been any intention of capturing the swindlers, they would have been in custody long ago.

How They Break Wild Horses in Texas.

Those who have never visited the regions where wild horses are caught or reared have but little idea how the tamed steed of the prairies is rendered tractable and useful. At the present day in Texas the hordes of mustangs that formerly ranged over its vast prairies have become almost extinct in the settled portions, and confine themselves to the extreme western counties. In their place are horses mostly crossed with American stock, which are in a state of semi-wildness—that is, they roam at will until certain seasons of the year, when all such as be can caught are driven in herds to huge pens constructed for the purpose, to be branded and marked, after which most of them are let loose to roam at will again.

When the owner of a portion of a herd desires to break any of his young horses he proceeds in this wise: The first movement is to lasso the horse secured by the head and fore feet, and throw him to the earth; then a kind of a hair halter, called a "bosal," is put on his head, both serve as a bridle and to stake the animal by, it being much more effectual than a halter or bridle in checking his frantic efforts to liberate himself. He is either tied up closely all night or staked, at the will of the owner. The next morning the sport begins.

All horse or stock raisers have one or more vaqueros, whom they employ for the special purpose of breaking and riding wild and refractory horses. These go out followed by all the members of the family, and proceed to overhaul their saddles and see that there is no defect in the "riging." When they are satisfied that all is secure, they lead or rather drag, forward the steed. He is alternately led, dragged and whipped forward, until he reaches the point where he is to be saddled.

A leather strap attached to the bosal is then pulled over his eyes, and a saddle blanket is dropped gently on his back, but very seldom remains at the first trial, as he will almost invariably shake it off. After one more trials, however he submits to both blanket and saddle. The latter article is strapped on so tightly with two girths, fore and flank, strapped indeed so tightly, that one unaccustomed to the sight would think that it was intended to cut the animal into; the rider now adjusts the stake-rope into reins tying it securely to the bosal, leaving a long end by which to hold on, in the event the horse should succeed in throwing him.

Everything is now ready for the mount. The rider adorns his heels with a huge pair of spurs, stands directly facing the horse, abreast or a little forward of the shoulder, seizes the under part of the bosal with his left hand, pulls the horse's head round near him to prevent being kicked, takes the stirrup in his right hand, and turning it towards him places his left foot in it firmly. Grasping the pommel, he nows gives the saddle a shake or two, makes one or two feints at mounting to see how his horseship will take it, and then suddenly springs, seating himself securely in the saddle.

The blinds, of course, are still over the eyes of the horse, and as a general thing he stands, his neck stretched out and head partly down a perfect picture of awkwardness. The rider is at his ease, and adjusts himself and everything about him with the greatest care as he knows there is warm work before him. When ready for the start he reaches gently forward and slips up the blinds. Naturally the horse is rather astonished at first and refuses to move. A sharp application of the whip and spur, however, readily induces him to change his mind. He takes timidly one or two awkward steps then suddenly doubling himself up until he resembles a camel, and throwing his head down before his fore feet, he begins a series of pitches, which consists in jumping as high and as far as he can, coming down stiff legged.

Those who have accomplished the extraordinary feat of going down a flight of stairs at one step can form some faint idea how it feel to sit on the back of a pitching horse.

Some of the more vicious will lie down when the saddle is buckeled on and it requires a tremendous amount of whipping to get them started; some will rear and fall backwards, occasionly killing their riders; some will pitch straight ahead for quite a distance, while others will pitch straight forward for a few jumps, and then, as the Texans say, "swap ends so quick that it makes your head swim."

Fortunately, they soon tire of such violent exercise, being wholly unaccustomed to a saddle or weight on their backs, and break down completely in a few hours. The saddles are then taken off and they are reserved for another trial next morning.

This excreise is continued for a week or more according to the nature of the horse, when he is pronounced gentle tractable enough for good rider, but woe to the unsuspecting greenhorn that if tempted to place himself on his back.

A few of the horses are naturally gentle natured, and never, unless frigthened in breaking, attempt to cut up at all. Those who love the horse, and desire to see him roaming at will in his beauty and symmetry, with glossy hide and flowing mane and tail, should go to the prairies.

Latest news from the fire raging along the coast between Manitowac and Apnafee, Wisconsin, states that the flames are lapping up every thing, and sweeping houses, barns, stores and piers in its course. Henry Marshall, of this city, who made his escape through the fiery element at the risk of his own life and horses, which were badly scorched, counted twenty-two dwellings and barns reduced to ashes. The losses in Kowanee county will reach a quarter of a million dollars. The farmers are burying their household goods in the ground to save them from destruction. As all communications are cut off, the exact situation can't be learned, but it is feared that unless rain sets in the damage, and perhaps loss of life, will be fearful. The wells are all dried up and the lake is the only resort.

Grant's idea of reforming the civil service consists of selling the office to the highest bidder. The Theory is that only the most respectable man can afford to pay the highest price.

Bravery of a Young Girl.

Robbert Gibbes, a gentleman who was an earnest patriot in the Revolution, was the owner of a plantation on the Stono, a few miles from Charleston. Here, one day, a British battalion encamped, and compelled the family to surrender to their use the lower part of the mansion, and to confine themselves to the upper story.

While here, on one dark and stormy evening, two galleys appeared, ascending the river, and began a most destructive fire upon the British encampment. The house seemed particularly exposed, although the vessels had been commanded to avoid firing upon it, and to confine their attention to the enemy's encampment.

Of this Mr. Gibbes was not aware, and, with the permission of the English commander, he set out, although suffering acutely from an infirmity, and, his numerous family, hastened to the protection of the neighboring plantation.

The balls were falling thick and fast, sometimes scattering dirt and disaster over the party, while their whizzing mingled with the fury of the distant affray, rendered the scene one of danger and terror. But scarcely had they proceeded so far as to be out of danger from the balls, when they discovered that, in the confusion and hurry of departure, an infant had been left behind.

To leave the child alone in his danger was impossible, and to return for him was an attempt of imminent peril. Mr. Gibbes was suffering under an infirmity that made his movements exceedingly slow and painful, and, therefore, it was impracticable for him to return.

The frightened and shattering servants stood trembling around, looking from one to the other in bewildering despair. Of all the rest of the party, saving Mrs. Gibbes, who was severely indisposed, none were above the age of childhood.

While thus undecided, Mary Anne Gibbes, but thirteen years of age, sprang forward and offered to go for the lad, who was a son of Mrs. Fenwick, Mrs. Gibbes' sister-in-law. The night was dark and stormy, the distance considerable, and the whole space swept by the cannon of the assailant. But without fear, she retraced her way, and reach the house without injury, where the scene was one of unmingled terror.

Undismayed by the thundering of the cannon, the crashing of the balls, the shrieks, shouts and imprecations of the combatants, she sprang to the door with the intention of entering, when she was brutally refused by the sentinel.

But tears, entreaties and the natural eloquence prompted by her heroism, overcame his opposition, and she was permitted to enter. With rapid steps she ascended to the third story, and, finding the child safe, she clasped it to her bosom and hastened to overtake her retreating family, and often the ploughing balls would scatter clouds of dust over her person. Uninjured her perilous journey way performed, and when she reached her friends she was welcomed by shouts of enthusiasm and admiration.

This intrepid action, worthy of an adult, and all glorious in a child, borrows a fair share of romance by the reflection that the child thus saved afterward became Lieu. Col. Fenwick so highly distinguished by his services in the last war with Great Britain.

The Anti-Grant Feeling.

An able correspondent of the Chicago Tribune has the following in regard to the anti-Grant feeling in New England:

Senator Wilson does not disguise the fact that the condition of the republican party in many states is very bad; that there exists a strong anti-Grant feeling. His anxiety seems to be to know how to harmonize the belligerent forces. He expresses his regret that Grant did not promptly remove the New Orleans federal office-holders who occupied the custom-house and employed federal bayonets in holding a convention there, and he thinks that Grant should promptly pronounce against such proceedings. The senator finds no President here in the capital, or hardly a cabinet minister, with whom to consult. Fish is at his private residence, luxuriating on the banks of the Hudson. Delano is stumping Ohio, to try to beat John Sherman for the senate. Ackerman, the Attorney General has gone to Gorgia and other southern states, to manipulate pending elections. Belknap, the Secretary of war, left her last night for New York. Boutwell, the Secretary of the Treasury who startled Wall street, a few days ago, by precipitating $6,000,000 of gold upon the market has been writing a political speech at Groton, Mass, to be spoken to the people of Ohio, with the intention of aiding Delano, as against Sherman. Creswell, postmaster general, lingers about his plantation, in Maryland, leaving the postoffice department to be run by subordinates. There has not been a defalcation in that department known to the public for two or three weeks!

Another defalcation has been discovered in the Paymaster's Department of the Army. The amount will almost reach the Hodge figures. The whole Grant administration is honeycombed with corruption, and defalcation can be unearthed in all directions by a proper search.

The New York World publishes from what it vouches as "a responsible source," on authoriy "to be furnished if required," the General Kilpatrick has asked and received ten thousand dollars for advocating the election of Mr. Walsh, in the present canvass in New Jersey.

The whole cost of twenty-four years of Democratic administration, including the Mexican and Indian wars, was $889,592,369.39. Twenty years of the Grant administration, at the rate of $411,255,477, 63, would cost the people $9,870,131,468 12. Is not Radical management a costly luxury?

Princess Louise, during her late visit to Ireland, took a fancy to the fine poplin manufactured in Dublin, and gave extensive orders for goods of that kind for her future wear.

Another Girl Full of Needles.

[From the Memphis Appeal.]

Last Sunday evening a young girl, who lives on the Raliegh road, complained of a violent pain in the head and right cheek. At first the mother of the girl thought that nothing serious would result, and that a visit of a doctor was not necessary. About 10 o'clock the same night the pain in the head and cheek began to cease. The child's eyes closed and her pains were forgotten in sleep. The mother, who watched incessantly at her daughter's bed-side, thought that before morning all would be well; but this was not the case. The sick girl awoke before 5 o'clock the next morning and began to cry in a most lamentable manner. Her mother inquired the cause of this. The daughter replied that she had a terrible pain in her right arm; she felt as though something was sticking her there. From the way she suffered, it was at last concluded to send for a doctor. The physician came about 9 o'clock and ordered some liniment to be rubbed on the painful arm. The next morning the doctor came again, asking Mary, for this was the child's name to show her arm. He perceived right below the shoulder three very small spots, shining as steele would. Touching them, he found that they were very hard. The girls mother then remarked that these dots looked like the heads of needles. The doctor could not believe that there was such a thing in Mary's arm; however to please the mother, he applied a small pair of pinchers to one of the spots. Now imagine the surprise of those present when he pulled out of the flesh three needles, which formed the three spots on the arm. But this is not the end. The physician continued his visits three more mornings, extracting each morning two more needles. After this Mary's pains passed away, and now she is as well as any of us. Can some scientific brain explain how needles found their way into the arms of this little girl, who endured so much suffering. If a crank were attached to such a girl, wouldn't she make a capital sewing machine?

Railroad Signals.

We have heard many boys and girls wonder what the different whistles of a locomotive and the motions of the of the conductors meant. A railroad official has kindly enlightened us, and we will explain to our readers what has seemed so mysterious. One whistle, 'off brakes;' three whistles, 'back up;' continuous whistles, 'danger.' A rapid succession of short whistles is the cattle alarm, at which the brakes will always be put down. When a conductor gives a signal by sweeping parting of the hands, on a level with with his eyes, it means, 'go ahead.' A downward motion of the hand, with extended arms, 'stop.' A beckoning motion of the hand, 'to back.' A lantern raised and lowered vertically, is a signal for 'starting;' swung at right angles or cross-ways the track, 'to stop;' swung in a circle, 'to back train.' A red flag, waived upon the track, is a signal of danger; so of other signals given with energy. A red flag hoisted at a station, is a signal for a train to stop; stuck up by the roadside, it is a signal of danger on the train ahead; carried unfurled upon an engine, a warning that another engine or train is on its way.—Oliver Optic.

Where is the Money.

A few days ago, at Fremont, General Morgan made a speech in which he rehearsed some of the points General Sherman, his opponent on the stump, had neglected to answer. He said:

Time and time again I have called upon Senator Sherman to tell the people what had become of the $2,700,000,000 of taxes collected by the administration during the six years of peace following the war; he failed to answer Again and again I demanded a reply at lengtl. the answer came. He says it was expended in paying pensions and the public debt. Let us see; here is the report of the Register of the Treasury, and he tells us that during these six years of peace the debt was reduced $284,000.000, and that the pensions amounted to less than $123,000,000, in all $407,000,000. Will the Senator tell what became of the small balance of $2,300,000,000,000? Will he answer?

He talks of pensions, but forgets to say that a Republican Congress and President created thirty admirals and seventy-three commodores, six fleets and thirty admirals, only six fleets and seventy-three commodores, six fleets and one hundred and three officers who have the rank of fleet commanders. He talks of pensions, but fails to stay under Gran't rule we have more than two thousand naval officers and only eight thousand seamen, one officers to every four men; only thirty-eight vessels afloat and two thousand officers in navy; thousand officers and only seven hundred at sea, thirteen hudred doing sea duty on shore. Here, farmers, is where a portion of your taxes goes.

A son of Erin, just arrived in this land of plenty, being in want, was told by a person to whom he applied for aid, to go to——, generally considered a very warm region. "Civilly indade," said Pat, "to invite me to your father's house."

LENT HOUSE.—This popular hotel is meeting with quite an extended patronage under the present able management of that popular landlord, J. W. Beecher, Esq. We are under obligations for special favors.

WHEN a lady faints, bite her ear. That is what a gallant youth did in such a case at Danbury, Conn., the other day. The effect was magical; the lady recovering sufficiently to box his ear, almost instantaneously.

E. ASHLEY has added another story to his frame house on Seventh street, and made other improvements that add considerably to the value of his property. And so all around improvements are going on to the satisfaction of all concerned.

TROTTING.—We are under obligations to O. J. Dempsey, Esq., the efficient Secretary of the Columbia City Driving Park Association, for a complimentary to the fall meeting, on the 12th and 13th of this month. For particulars see programme in Post Office.

A fellow went into a store and being a friend of the proprietor, stepped behind the counter and helped himself to a handful of what he supposed filberts, but after cracking a dozen or so, threw the rest down in disgust exclaiming, "why darn it them's nutmegs."

OUR SCHOOL.—The present efficiency of our school is noticiable, from the fact that a large number of foreign scholars are in attendance. Prof. McIntosh and his able assistants are doing a good work, and everything speaks in praise of the present excellent management of the Academy.

HERE is an item of interest to tea drinkers: All the choice 'chops' of Congou brought to the Hankow market this season have been bought for the Russian market, and shipped direct to Odessa. Not a single 'chop' of the finest grade of first crop tea has been seen in England or America of the growth of 1871; neither will there be of 1872.

James I. Best, Esq., of Waterloo, was in town on Monday. We endeavored to 'interview' the gentleman in regard to his alleged congressional aspiration but failed to draw him out. It is intimated, however, that he would not object to wearing the judicial ermine now adorning Judge Tousley.—Ligonier Banner.

OUR enterprising citizen, Geo. Ensley, Esq., is burning another Kiln of brick the second one this season. This will make about 400,000 brick from one yard while just across the road, Mr. Brandon has made nearly as many more. This will aid materially in building up our town in a substantial manner. Everybody should contract brick buildings if possible.

THE peddler is an itinerant wanderer who calls upon you, shows his wares hastily, pockets your money with alacrity, and vanishes, never to be seen by you again. Buy your goods of the merchant who lives in your midst, keeps a supply of everything you need, invites your inspection, advertises his goods in the paper, contributes to all local improvements, and deserves and earns your patronage.

LIFTING JACK.—Our farmers find it very inconvenient many times to grease their wagons, from the fact that there are no means at hand to raise the wheels for that purpose. This inconvenience has been entirely obviated by Hermance's Lifting Jack, which does the work most effectually. It is a small stout piece of work and is far ahead of anything in this line, that we have ever seen. For sale at this place.

OUR thanks are due F. R. Myres Esq. of the P. Ft. W. & C. R. R. for special favors.

WE know a woman, pale and slight, with heart in hopeless mood, who often toils throughout the night to earn her husband's food; while he, in strength of manhood's power, some gay saloon will seek, and spends more money in an hour than she earns in a week.

WE clip the following from the Warsaw Indianian of last week:

The extension of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad agitates the people of Leesburg.

The number of children in Kosiusko County, between the ages of six and twenty-one years of age, enumerated this year for school purposes, is 8,665.

Last year about this time, there were sixty-five empty houses in this place, according to the United States census reports. To-day, houses can scarcely be procured, and none that are fit to live in, are without tenants.

PLAIN, practicle articles are always welcomed by the editor; and if you have learned any new thing, don't keep it hoarded up where it will benefit but yourself but write it out plain, short as you can, and give it the motive power of a postage stamp toward the editorial sanctum of the COURIER. If it is crude and ungainly the editor can fix it up. If it has a good idea embodied in even rough settings. One man, even if he has a big head, can not monopolize all knowledge, and the facts learned by you in your daily experience are the facts others need.

ACTION.—Men who have half a dozen irons in the fire are not the ones to go crazy. It is the man of voluntary or compelled leisure who mopes and pines and thinks himself into the mad-house or the grave. Motion is all nature's law. Action is man's salvation, physical and mental; and yet nine out of ten are wishfully looking forward to the coveted hour when they shall have leisure to do nothing—the very siren that has lured to death many a 'successful' man. He only is truely wise who lays himself out to work till life's latest hour, and that is the man who will live the longest, and who will live to the most purpose.

HOW TO KEEP CIDER.—As this is the time of year when millions of bushels of apples are being crushed into cider, it is of interest to housekeepers to be acquainted with the best receipe of keeping it sweet Here is one from the Journal of the farm, which will be found to answer the purpose admirably: Let the cider after it comes from the press stand until the pumace settles; then put into a clean vessel and let it come to a boil, skimming off the scum carefully; then put it in kegs or demijohns and cork it and seal it tightly. It will keep for years.

THE LOCAL PAPER.—A local newspaper is a travelling agent, taking his weekly round to the families of all their customers. No matter whether times are good or dull, no matter whether trade is brisk or otherwise, no business can afford to take down his sign, nor withdraw the pleasing influence of a weekly chat with his customers through the newspaper. For a business man to stop advertising, would be equivalent to his saying, "I have stopped business, and ask no more favors of the people."

GOOD.—We learn that our School Board have decided to return the present corps of male teachers now engaged in building up our educational interests for the winter term. We hope this has been fully decided upon, as in our opinion, it cannot be improved in this section of the country. Mr. McIntosh stands at the head of his profession and Mr. Houser is well known throughout the county as a competent and successful teacher. A vacation of a week or two will take place after the present term, before the winter term begins, and we doubt not the attendance will be considerably increased under this arrangement.

The Folio, for October, comes to us greatly enlarged and improved. It now gives three pieces of music, complete, (which cost one dollar and twenty cents in sheet form) a superd portrait of Theodore Thomas, and thirty columns of original reading-matter, all for ten cents. The publishers claim that the Folio has increased its circulation more than ten thousand copies since last January. This is a remarkakable event in journalism and demonstrates the fact that the people are not slow to see the advantages of buying their music in this form. The Folio is edited by Dexter Smith, the well known song writer and published at one dollar a year by White, Smith & Perry, Boston. Specimen copies are sent free to any address.

TRACK-LAYING, on the Eel River R. R. has reached a point about five miles east of Churubusco, from this place. Some little grading is yet to be done from the end of the track to Auburn, but this will only delay the track layers a few days.—By the 5th or 10th of October, at farthest an eastern connection will be establised by way of the Saginaw Railroad. Three cheers for Quirk & Co.—Col. City Post.

By next week, at least, we may look for the completion of the track to this place as far as the laying is concerned. Ought we not to make preparation for a jubilee over the matter, as they did at Manchester a few weeks ago. There will no doubt be an excursion train form the western terminus, when it is completed, and a grand time might be arranged.

IF our subscribers do not pay up a little more liberal, we will have to suspend the publication of the Democrat. We can't stand it many weeks longer, when we have to pay out $30 per week and receive three or four. Corydon Democrat.

True as Gospel. The Democrat is not a large but a very spicy paper, and is certainly deserving of a much more liberal support than the Democracy of Harrison county seem to bestow upon it. If Democrats do not sustain their local papers they cannot expect to make great headway in the work of revolutionizing public sentiment.—Ligonier Banner.

THERE is still a large number of our subscribers that have not paid us yet for the current year. We hope that they will attend to this matter at once. At the end of the year we shall stop sending the COURIER to all those who have had it for one year and have failed to pay for it.—Come up, gentlemen, and help us with what belongs to us.

JUDGING by any test that can be applied to [illegible] companies, the Phenix of Brooklyn stands pre-eminent. It has been in successful operation for many years; it has stood the test of time, of heavy losses, of hard times, of financial storms and come out unscathed and unshaken. It has attained a national reputation for safety, fair dealing and prompt payment of losses, and it does a national business.—Those wanting their property insured in a good company should call at the COURIER office, and get a policy.

DURING the war a Captain in the Union army laid sick at St John's Hospital in Cincinnati. His illness was so serious that his life was despaired of, and he himself did not expect to recover. A lady of that city and a most estimable lady, whose husband was a salesman on Pearl street was at that time, and all thro' the war, giving her time to the care of the sick and wounded soldiers. The sick Captain was noticed by her in the rounds one day, as he lay expecting to die. She assured him he would recover; took charge of him, and by careful nursing saved his life. He recovered his health, and after the war engaged in business here and was successful. Desiring to express in some tangible form his gratitude, he took out a policy in a life insurance company for ten thousand dollars, and indorsed upon the back of it a transfer to this lady, informing no one of the fact but his own brother. A week or two since he sickened and died, and the lady will receive the ten thousand dollars. Get your property insured in Phenix of Brooklyn.

KEEPING APPLES.—An old gentlemam, with forty years experience, and who loves apples, wants us to give the following hints on gathering and keeping the fruit, which he has tried repeatedly to his own satisfaction:

'As the method to be given has proved good with me, it is commended with confidence to all: Gather or harvest the fruit a week or ten days in advance of the usual time, and place it in a moderately cool place, where the temperature ranges from 50 to 60 degrees, and let it remain undisturbed for two, or even three weeks, and at any time after the 'sweating' is over carefully assort the fruit and select the best specimens for preservation. Wrap each apple in a thin newspaper and pack it in an air-tight box, which can be made by covering any moderately tight box on the out side with paper. Put on the cover and place the box in a dry place, beyond the reach of frost and apple-loving children, and you can have Baldwins, russet's or good keeping varieties of apples the following July and August.'

Home.

Of all the inborn affections that spring up and twine themselves around the heart of man, says an exchange, there is none so tenacious, so beautifying, or so undying as the love of Home.

A happy home is a glorious and instructive sight; one which it does the heart good to see, and which, once beheld, leaves an ineffaceable impression on the mind.—Which of us is it, that wandering in the stormy paths of the world, does not look back with a certain degree of reverent affection on that old familiar spot, even though its memories may be linked with many an unhappy thought. The tree, beneath whose shadow we rested our weary limbs in the sultry days of summer; the old garden, theater of many a daring exploit, and scene of midnight plunder; the small bed-room, where in the long winter nights we wept ourselves to sleep, and there slumbered soundly until the broad sunshine woke us again with all our cares forgotten, and cast off with the joyous indifference of childhood; all these come refreshingly back upon our memories, when, amid the roar and turmoil of the world, we sigh over the checquered days of youth.

AN EDITOR IN HEAVEN.—Such is the caption of an article which has been going the rounds of the papers for sometime, and which appears to be something new under the sun:

'An editor in heaven!' There's nothing strange about that at all, its a moral as well as a professional impossibility for them to go anywhere else.

'Once upon a time, after the demise of the corpse editorial, he presented himself at the gate of the Holy City and requested admission. The door keeper asked him what had been his occupation terra firma? He replied that he was an editor Well said the outside guardian, we have a crowd of your kind here now, and they all came as dead heads! If you can pay your passage you may come in—if not, you must put yourself under the control of a personage you ruled down below, (meaning the devil). Not having the wherewithal to go in, our brother of the quil and scissors posted off and presented himself at the entrance of Pluto's dark domain. A very dark complectioned gentleman stood sentry, and in a gruff voice said; 'Who comes there! An humble disciple of Faust! was the calm reply. Then hold on; you can't be admitted, exclaimed the gentleman in black, evincing considerable agitation, and fiercely scowling on him. 'Why not!' demanded the typo, who began to get somewhat huffish, and looked around for an iron sheep's foot with which to force an entrance. 'Well sir, replied his Satanic Majesty, we let one of your profession in here many years ago, and he kept up a continual row with his former delinquent subscribers, and as we have more of that class than any other it will be impossible to allow your admittance.

Our delinquents had better reflect where they are drifting to, and prevent this terrible state of things by paying the printer promptly.

The New Albany rolling mill will be put in operation again next week.

Notice to Taxpayers.

The corporation taxes of the town of Auburn DeKalb County, Indiana, for the year 1871 are as follows:

Fifty cents on each $100 valuation and twenty-five cents on each taxable poll.

The coporation taxes of said town are now due and will be received by the undersigned at Guy Plum's Law Office in said town from the 31st day of August '71 to the 30th day of November 1871.

IN LIMBO.—A drunken feller in jail last night.

FIRE.—Yesterday morning the fine residence of Joel Brand, who lives about five miles north of this place, was entirely distroyed by fire.

A MATCH game of base ball will be played, last Saturday, between the Rockfords of this place, and the Junior club, of Waterloo, on the grounds of the latter.

KILLED.—Just as we go to press we learn that Thomas Miller, who resided about two miles south of town, was killed, last night, by the upsetting of a wagon of cross ties, for the Eel River R. R. The most horrible part is that he must have laid under the ties for ten or twelve hours before he was found. He leaves a large and respectable family to morurn his loss.

EEL RIVER R. R.—We are happy to announce that this road which has struggled for life for fifteen years, has now over forty-five miles of iron laid, and may be now considered beyond a peradventure a real, living thing, and under the circumstances a success. The iron is now laid within four miles of the junction of the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. five miles southwest of this place. Great credit is due Prest. Collins, Messrs Burke & Quirk, Mansfield, & Scanlan and others, for their indomitable energy and capacity as railroad men. The rumor is current that the company and contractors intend completing this road through to Butler by January next. In view of the early opening of this road and completion to this place a number of citizens have expressed a desire to hold a meeting at the Court House Saturday evening next, to take some steps toward having a celebration on the event, and that invitations be extended to all points on the line. Let there be a full house, and show to our friends on the line that we are with them, in the good work.

Notice of Administration.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of Dekalb County State of Indiana, Administrator of the Estate of William Dunn, late of said County, deceased. Said Estate is supposed to be solvent.

J. C. St.CLAIR Adm'r.

September 29, 1871.

THE following will explain itself. It purports to come from the irresistible, "B Michigan," who broke jail, at this place place last June. Some think it a cunningly devised story by W. Fales, a fellow prisoner at the time, and others regard it as genuine:

SAYBROOK McCLAIN COUNTY ILLINOIS Sep. 23, '71.

JERRY PLUM, Esq.:—I return you my sincere thanks for the kindness I received from you and your family while under your care. I think you would have taken betteer care of me if you had known who I was. I will now tell you who and what I am. I have been a horse thief ever since 1846, and my name is Peter Zimmerman, of Donegal, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania. I was arrested the first time in 1847, for passing counterfeit money. But I got clear. Next I was arrested in Fayette Co., Pennsylvania, and put in Uniontown jail for horse stealing. That was in 1848, but I broke jail and took to my old trade horse stealing. I was back to Fayette county, Pa., two years ago, stole a horse and was caught and put in Uniontown jail the second time. One of the old commissioners knew me and had the sheriff iron me and watch me close but I got away the second time. I will not write you a history of my life but will tell you my Lafayette scrape and let you guess at the balance.

Some seven years ago I was arrested in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, for horse stealing and put in the Lafayette jail and was there six weeks. Broke out, stole a horse that same night, went to Illinois, sold and came back to Indiana and stole five horses in Carrol Co. Ind., and had them safe in Illinois, but I wanted one more. So I came back to Carroll, and was caught with the sixth horse and put in Delphi jail. I plead guilty and was sent to Michigan City for three years, but in going to Michigan City the sheriff of Delphi took me by the way of Lafayette and put me in jail there and sheriff Colgrove knew me, and had me ironed. When my time was out in Michigan City, I was brought back to Lafayette was there seven days and resolved to be free or die. When he came to lock me up I made the attack and fought my way out just as I did in Auburn. The Sheriff of Layfette squealed murder 'worser' than you did

Mr. Plum I will direct this letter to Sol Barney and he will send it to you.

Well, Sol, did I not tell you that I would get clear.

State Items.

Laporte claims the dirtiest man in the State.

A bull harnessed in a sulky, and driven by a darkly colored indivdual, was one of the sights of the Dearborn County Fair.

John Heffran, a young man aged twenty-two, while coupling cars was run over and killed, in Fort Wanye, on Friday last.

Old Mrs. Winters, of Dale, Spencer Co., will never attempt to fill a burning lamp with kerosene again. She has gone to her reward.

The Laporte Argus authoritatively declares that two months after the Mishawaka young men get married they become insane, and have to be taken to the asylum. The girls down there mean business.

The Terre Haute Enterprise tells how Judge Patterson waded across the Wabash a few days since, in puris naturalibus, carrying his clothes in a bundle on top of his head, while country ladies gathered on the bank of the river to witness the novel spectacle.

A Floyd county man went through the streets of New Albany with a live snake in his hand, the other day, which he intended to donate to the Natural History Society, of that city, while a citizen went the other way with 'snakes in his boots,' which he was willing to donate to anybody.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says: 'We were shown, this morning, by Mr. Gillet, a corn stalk nine feet and seven inches in hight, bearing two ears of corn thirteen inches in length. We expressed our surprise, when the old gentleman remarked in language plain—'Thunder and botheration, I only brought this in as a sample; if any one beats it, I've got one out there two feet higher, and bearing as many more ears.'

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.
This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.
It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.
To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proved by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.
In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

How to get rid of stumps. The folowin is recommended by one who has tried it, as the speediest, safest and surest way to get rid of stumps of any and all kinds:

If you have many acres to clear of stumps get one barrel of black machine oil; then take an inch and a quarter auger, and bore four holes in the largest stumps, letting the auger stand towards you in an angle of forty five degrees. Bore eight inches deep. Then fill the holes three-fourths full of the oil, and plug up tight. Pour, also, one-third of a pint on top, in the center, of the nitre, and let it spread well. When done preparing, or say in in five days, kindle your fires on top of the stumps.

Farmers, Take Care of Your Tools. Farmers are very apt to let their bright tools, especially plowshares, become rusty. Now, this cannot take place if these bright surfaces be kept either perfectly dry, or from contact with the air. The experiments of Dr. Calvert have proved that carbonic acid is the principal agent in causing metals to rust. This is always present in the air, but it cannot take effect upon any substance unless moisture is present. Also, and for this reason, we see tools that are left in the rain, or lying out at night, soon become rusty. Keep on the bright surfaces, when not in use, painted with something that will exclude moisture and air. Carbon oil and lamp black are good, and are easily removed when the tool is wanted.

How the Horses were Stopped.

A frightful disaster was recently averted in England by the good sense and bravery of a Cornish farmer. The horses of a stage coach had become unruly, and dragged the reins from the frightened driver, when the farmer, who was inside, forced himself upon the back of the shaft-horse, and thence to the leader. By patting and caressing, he guided the terrible beasts down a steep, mountainous road, through the narrow streets of a crowded village, and finally brought them safe to a halt in the open country after a mad drive of eight or ten miles. Commenting on the farmer's method, [illegible] a model for the act, a London paper says:—"It was odd that it should have required the visit of an Ohio farmer, some years ago, to make so elementary a truth clear, but in fact Rarey gave the truth a practical application. Horses, though docile and gentle, are timid and nervous; noise and violence will only aggravate their terror if once roused; but they can be soothed if a man has the sense and temper to go about his task in the right way. Rarey was an apostle of the truest humanity, and it is only to be regretted that much of his teaching fell on so stony and ungenial soil as the coarse nature of English hinds and carmen."

Curiosities of Life.

Lay your finger on your pulse and know that at every stroke some immortal soul passes to his Maker—some fellow being crosses the river of death; and if we think of it we may well wonder that it should be so long before our turn comes.

Half of all who live die before seventeen.

Only one person in ten thousand lives to be one hundred years old, and but one in a hundred reaches sixty.

The married man lives longer than the single.

There is one soldier in every eight persons, and out of every thousand born ninety-five weddings take place.

If you take a thousand persons who have reached seventy years, they are of

Clergymen, orators and public speakers	43
Farmers	40
Workmen	33
Soldiers	32
Lawyers	29
Professors	27
Doctors	24

These statements are very instructive. Farmers and workmen do not arrive at good old age as often as clergymen and other who perform no manual labor; but this is owing to the neglect of the laws of health, inattention to habits of life in eating, drinking, sleeping, dress, and proper care after the of the day is done. These farmers or workmen eat a hearty supper of a summer's day, and sit around the doors in their shirt sleeves, and in their tired condition and weakened circulation are easily chilled, laying the foundation for diarrhœa, billious colic, lung fever or consumption.

Waiting for the Last Trump.

A correspondent, who forwards his address, puts to record the last words of a noted gambler:

Being a constant reader of your valuable paper, and also an old friend of Mark Train's—he and I worked many a day "at ease"—I am sorely temptea to address you, and, like Adam of old, being tempted fell.

We have, or had while in these parts a man named Westfall, a gambler by profession, who oscilated up and down the line of K. and T. R. R. R. turning an honest penny whenever and wherever he could, and who, after a long spree, turned up in Humbolt sick, and became impressed with the idea that he was about to hand in his checks, requested the presence of some minister, where upon one Hartman, an ex-Methodist exhorter, whose sands had nearly run out, was called in to administer the desired spiritual consolation.

"What can be done for me," anxiously exclaimed Westfall.

"Repent and you will be saved," was the answer.

"And will I go to heaven?"

"I hope so."

"And be an angel?"

"Yes."

"And have wings?"

"Yes."

"Will you go to heaven, too?"

"I hope and believe so."

"Will you be an angel?"

"I hope to be."

Will you have wings?"

"Yes."

When I get to heaven and you get to heaven, and I am an angel and you are an angel, and I have wings and you have wings, I'll fly you for a ten dollar note."

Was not the ruling passion strong in life?"—Galaxy Club Room.

VINEGAR BITTERS

VEGETABLE FREE FROM PURELY ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

[illegible] Gen. Agents, San Francisco, Cal., and 32 Commerce street, N. Y.

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Billous Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

In a small country town resides a clergyman who is the [illegible] who esteem him very highly, and whom he is very highly, and whom he is very [illegible] since. While taking a ramble through the village he stopped at the house of one of his parishioners, and after the usual conversation, ran as follows:

'Well, Mrs. W—, can you tell me how Adam fell?'

The lady commenced to smile [illegible], and finally replied:

'Why, my dear doctor, you are not serious?'

'Very serious, indeed responded the doctor.

Mrs. W—, whose husbands name happens to be Adam, replied:

'Well, well, you shall have it doctor.—You see, Adam went to climb over the fence the other day to go to Deacon M—'s for a bottle of whisky, when an oar lying on the ground took his foot; over Adam [illegible] in; and that's the whole truth of the matter.'

The following correspondence is said to have taken place between a merchant and one of his clients:

"Sir your account hes been [illegible] for two years; I must have it settled immediately."

Answer—"Sir things do usually settle by standing; I regret that my account is an exception. If it has been standing too, long, suppose you let it run a little."

FI[illegible]

Sitting upon our cottage stoop,
By autumn maples shaded,
I call the gentle visions up
That time had nearly faded,
Th[illegible] from the West
In streams of golden glory;
So fold your head, love, on my breast
And hear my olden story.

'Tis five-and-twenty [illegible]
Since, [illegible] the
We launched [illegible]
And all serene the weather.
With simple trust in Providence,
We set the sails upon her;
[illegible] and common sense,
Your beauty, love and honor.

For five-and-twenty years, my dear,
The billows lightly skimming;
[illegible]
Our eyes and spirits [illegible]
How dark that night frowned overhead,
When hope foresaw no morrow,
And we beside our firstling dead
Drank our first cup of sorrow.

'This five-and-twenty years, my dear,
Yet music in our dwelling,
The chilren's prattle that we hear
About our hearthstone swelling.
God bless them all, the loving band
So glad to call you mother;
With heart to heart, an hand to han d,
Clinging to one another.

Through five-and-twenty years, my dear,
When e'er my arm was weary,
[illegible]
Your words were ever cheery.
When mid the tempest and the night,
With courage sorely shrinking,
Thy [illegible] the light
That kept [illegible] from sinking.

'Tis five-and-twenty years, my dear,
Slight chance in you revealing;
But o[illegible] see them here—
The silver hairs are stealing.
Yet let them come, while still thy breast
Retains the fond emotion
That nerved my arm when first we prest
Our way out on life's ocean.

Trout Fishing According to the Sexteenth Amendment.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Post gives the following account of a day's trout fishing with 'Euphemia:'

'We now stumbled and scrambled bravely down the stream, trying our flies at every pool and ripple. The woods covered us with a roof of green, the brook rippled merrily beneath ourfeet, while the beautiful laurel, decked with clusters of splendid white blossoms, inclosed us on either side. It was a most charming experience. But we got no bites!

'Euphy,' said I, looking back, struck by a sudden thought, 'you must take off that red bow. It frightens the fish, and that must be the reason we had no bites.'

'Don't trouts like red?' said she, resting her rod in the most reckless manner against a bush, while she took off the too brilliant bow.

'Anything bright frightens them, of course,' I replied, 'and I wish, Euphy, that you wouldn't say 'trouts.' You don't say 'sheeps,' do you?'

'No,' said she, jerking her line from the bush, 'but they go in flocks—collectively, you know—and the trouts don't, at least not in this stream.'

I went on fishing.

Silence for five minutes; then as we passed a patch of wet sand, Euphemia, who was brought up on the Long Island coast, proposed that we should stop and dig for clams. But this I indignantly declined.

Just here I thought I had a bite. I was almost sure of it—when Euphemia from some little distance called out, 'Here! Quick! Whew!'

'Play him,' I cried. 'Give him line,' and I bounded over the rocks to her assistance. 'Wait Euphy, let me pull him out!'

'I wish you would,' she said, 'I have run the old hook way into my finger.'

There were many little interruptions like this, most of them occassioned by Euphemia's parasol; but, after a while, I impressed upon her mind that trout would only bite amid the most profound silence and that she must put a restraint upon her self, and I do believe after that, the dear creature made some pretty bad slips without uttering a word.

After a time I came to a pool, and was fishing very cautiously in it, whipping my fly about as artistically as the business would permit, when Euphemia crept up behind me.

'John,' she whispered, 'I've got one.'

'Where is it?' said I, not daring to look around, for I expected a bite every moment.

'Hooked on my line,' said she, in a voice trembling with excitement, 'won't you take it off?'

'In just one minute,' I said, watching my fly.

'Its just like a lobster, only smaller,' she whispered.

I could not help looking around at that.

'Do you call that a trout,' I cried. 'It is a crawfish.'

'Bother,' said Euphemia, 'I tho't there was nothing here but trouts —.'

'Fish in this pool, Euphy,' I said, pitying the little confusion into which the crawfish had thrown her, 'and I'll go farther down.'

The place in which I now fished was capital. There was a ripple and deep hole, and, what is more, a trout. I saw him jump at a real fly just before I reached the spot. So, with bright hopes I danced it for about fifteen minutes, and several times I tho't I saw some thing rise up toward my hook. At last a fish seized it. I jerked him out of the water, but he got off. But I wasn't a bit discouraged. If he was there I could catch him. Breathlessly awaiting another rise I heard a wild scream from behind. I turned instantly, and there was Euphemia in her pool!

I had her out in a moment.

'I had a bite,' she said, when I had [illegible] and seated her on a rock, 'and the stones were so slippery that I forgot, and went right in.'

We now gave up fishing and hurried up the stream into the sunlight. It was impossible for Euphemia to go back to the house in the plight she was. For about a foot and a half from the ground she was as wet, as she expressed it, as 'sop.' So we went to a retired field, and she sat in the sun until she dried, turning herself about while I kept the sun off her face with her parasol.

I don't think I will take Euphemia trout fishing any more.

Hens in Place of Dogs.

There is hardly a family that does not throw away enough table scraps to keep at least half a dozen hens; and many that keep a nuisance in the shape of a dog, that does no good, but costs more than a dozen good hens, complain that they cannot afford to keep hens. One dog in a neighborhood is generally a greater trouble to the neighbors than a flock of hens would be, for if hens are well fed at home they will rarely go away. But whoever saw a dog that was not pest, running across the newly-made garden, and sticking his nose into everything. Kill off the curs and give the food to the hens, and you will find pleasure as well as profit in so doing. We wish there was a tax of one hundred dollars on every dog kept in the country. Those that are of value as watch dogs could be retained, while the host of snarling dirty curs would give place to some more useful and less troublesome pet.—Poultry Standard.

A Good Word for John Chinaman.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writes from San Francisco:

As I came down town, I entered a street car, on a line owned and managed by leading Democrats, and beheld, to my astonishment, a sight to curdle the blood and palsy the tongue of a representative of the noble Caucasian race like myself. Could I believe my eyes? I doubted it for the moment. Other organs bore more unquestionable testimony on the subject. A negress black as the ace of spades, dressed to kill, with a waterfall like half of a winter squash, a terrible Grecian bend, and heels to her gaiters as long as ordinary stilts, sat at the forward end of the car calmly talking woman's rights to a bewildered looking, measley-looking young man, of doubtless descent, and, right opposite sat—oh! horror of horrors!—a Chinaman!

As a truthful witness, I am compelled terribly against my will to state in regard to this Chinaman, that—

He was neatly dressed.

That he was apparently cleanly in person.

That he was not chewing tobacco and spitting the saliva over the floor and the ladies' dresses.

That he was not drunk.

That he was not using profane, obscene, or vulgar language.

That he was not impertinently staring at the ladies.

And, in short, that he was industriously engaged in minding his own business and meddling with nobody, having apparently never heard that, according to the platforms of both the Democratic and Republican parties of California, he was an outlaw, a nuisance, a pariah, and an interloper, and ought to be 'abrogated.'

MY BIT OF ROMANCE.

BY DION.

I was lying lazily under the hedge on the side away from the road, and chewing a straw. The sun was glaring half way down the west, and I had no intention of coming out from the shade until he began to moderate slightly. I was amusing myself idly by lifting and poising a strong ten-foot pole which lay near, and to balance it in one hand, listening, meanwhile, to the songs of the birds.

I was thinking, too, of a dark-browed young fellow, with a villainous expression, whom I had seen standing about the hotel door as I came out, and of whome I had heard it whispered that he was in love with a young lady at the house, who had rejected him and was now likely to be in danger, as he was exceedingly jealous. I had noticed, as I passed, the butt of a revolver under his coat (a shape I had become familiar with), and a bad glitter in his eye. I did not care particularly about him, however, but was wondering whether the young lady was pretty, and if I should see her. Then, if I wouldn't happen to have a chance to rescue her from this rejected suitor, and what an adventure it would be. Then I devoted my attention to the pole again.

Suddenly I heard the clatter of hoofs coming down the road at a tremendous pace. The sound was so sudden and sharp that I instantly sprang to my feet and looked over the hedge. Three hundred yards away was a black horse bestridden by the figure of a man with a black slouch hat, and brandishing a revolver in one hand, while with the other he held the bridle of a bright bay, which carried a young lady with a trailing feather in her hat and a long dress. She was waving her hand screaming for help, while she pulled with all her strength on the bridle reins. But his strong hand held them firm, and the bay, frightened by the struggle, stretched forward at his best gait. Why this scoundrel was dragging away with him this fair damsel, I did not stop to inquire; nor did I commit the absurdity of leaping into the road and trying to stop him. That revolver looked ready for use. In one instant I grasped my ten foot pole and started across the fields at full jump, to where the road made a sudden swerve to the right and made a cross-cut. I reached the end of the field four rods in advance of the flying steeds. Down I went on one knee and protected my pole through the hedge at the right moment. It instantly tangled the legs of the shoulder while his rider flew over his black, and away he went over on his head, turned, and was flung heavily on his back with the reins of the other horse clenched in his fist. The bay gave his arm one strong twitch, felt the check, and stopped quivering through his whole frame.

I planted my pole and came lightly over the hedge. I was at the side of the bay in two steps, and had secured hold of the bit, when the lady gave one little sigh and slid off her saddle into my arms. Seeing that her horse was pretty well anchored by the dismounted cavalier, I let go the bridle to support my lovely burden—for I had already taken a look into the face of the lady I had rescued, and saw that she was extremely pretty.

She supported her self on my arm for a few minutes, and then said faintly:

'Let me go. Mr. Peyton, this is an insult!'

As I did not rejoice in the name of Peyton, and as she was unable to stand, I took the liberty of disobeying her; and she, not having strength to enforce her orders, reclined quietly in my arms. At length, with a shudder, she rallied herself, and rolled her big brown eyes up into mine.

'Why,' she said, with difficulty, 'you are not Mr. Peyton! What is the matter, sir?'

Then she looked round.

'Oh!' she exclaimed, as she saw the struggling horse and senseless rider, 'Mr. Peyton was thrown—I remember. Is he killed? And look at that poor horse! Oh, dear!'

She began to cry, and I had to murmur a few words of encouragement in her ear. Then she glanced round and glided gently out of my arms.

Then another look into my face.

'He was dragging my horse along, wasn't he? And I thank you for stopping us.'

'I stopped him. I trust it was right. You seemed unwilling.'

'Unwilling?' and she beamed out in glorious smile. 'He surprised me while I was riding down this road—took the bridle and dragged me along. I scarcely know what would have happened if you had not stopped us. Oh! is he killed?'

'I am sure I don't know,' said I; for I was too cool blooded to be upset by such an affair as this. 'I will see whether his heart beats. Yes, it does,' as I slid my hand under his vest. Then I glanced in his face. It was the man whom I had seen in the door of the hotel. This must be the young lady who had rejected him. I glanced up with this suspicion in my eyes, and she blushed feebly.

I lifted the man's head on my knee, and remarked:

'Miss—'

'Dallas.'

'If you will get me some water in this hat from the spring running through the hedge back yonder, I think we will recover this graceless scamp, if you think he deserves it.' And I flung her his sombrero. 'You had better put this over that dead thorn-[illegible] I noted, untwisting the rein of her horse from his fingers, and tossing it to her.

[illegible] 'This,' I said sotto voce, 'I will appropriate,' and from his other hand I wrenched his revolver and put it in my pocket.

Miss Dallas came with a hat full of water and commenced to bathe his forehead with it. It is mere senseless cruelty to dash an icy flood over a helpless man, and she knew it. Peyton was not seriously hurt, and with two or three grasps he lifted his head. Miss Dallas, seeing that she was not further needed, retreated behind me.

Peyton then drew himself up, staggered to his feet, stood dizzy and glaring.

'What the deuce did you do to my horse?' he said, savagely, as his senses came back.

'What were you doing with this young lady?' I retorted as fiercely.

'None of your business. Let her go. She's mine. I shall have her,' and he made a spring at Miss Dallas, who shrank away from him.

I took the liberty of sliding my arm around her waist and placing myself in his way. I coolly drew his revolver and leveled it at his head.

'My ardent friend,' said I, 'I presume you have an aversion to cold lead. Most men have. Now I would advise you to mount that horse and make tracks down the road as fast as he'll carry you. If I find you in this part of the country again I'll shoot you like a dog,' and raised my voice to a coarse shout that cowed him.

He silently set his shoulder to the horse's side, rolled him up on his feet, stood a few minutes in the stirrups, and then dashed down the road, still under the unflinching muzzle of my pistol.

When he disappeared around the curve, I turned to Miss Dallas, who was still looking after him.

'O,' she said, 'how did you have the courage to do that? I am so much obliged to you, I shall feel always indebted. I should never have thought of doing all those things.'

This was very sweet to here from the rosy lips of pretty young woman, and I replied gaily:

'It is nothing. If I could have stopped the black with my own life I would gladly have done so.'

Then she blushed faintly.

'I suppose I needn't say that you have relieved me from a very unwelcome situation?'

'If he ever troubles you again,' I said, 'I shall carry out my threat,' and I let down the hammer of my revolver and put it in my pocket. 'The young villain—to trouble you! But will you return to the hotel? We are not far away.'

'If you please,' said she, smiling sweetly; 'my friends must be anxious.'

I led up her horse, gave her a hand into the saddle, and as the bay was frightened and restless, took a firm hold on the bit and led him slowly. Preceeding thus in a pleasant conversation, which I must confess I conducted the horse blindly, for I was looking up in her face, we came to the hotel. I stopped the bay by the porch, where there was fortunately no one waiting to stare at us, and assisted her to alight. She turned to say—

'I shall be glad to see you at dinner,' and then glided up stairs.

I took the horse round to the stables and gave the groom a double fee.

Our dinner hour was waited with more than ordinary impatience. I knew I should then see the young lady again, and become acquainted with her. Suddenly an idea struck me, inspired by my knowledge of social strategy, which is as deep, as deadly, as that of war. I bolted into the dining room, where the colored servants were shuffling to and fro, and stopped the head waiter.

'I say Sam is there a young lady stopping here?'

'Young lady!' said he, showing his white teeth in a wide smile, 'right smart of young ladies, sah; bout fifty.'

'Oh yes, I know,' I returned; 'but I want to find a particular one—eh, Sam?' and he found a crisp new two dollar note in his hands. His interest and perception were instantly brightened.

'This one,' I continued, 'is very pretty; has brown eyes, light hair, went out for a ride this morning, in a black dress, and with a long feather in her hat.'

'Oh, yes!' said the obsequious Sam, smiling and rubbing his hands. 'Th[illegible] sah! Lady's name is Miss Dallas.'

'Yes.'

'Then she sit right here, sah. Here's their napkin, and here's the young lady's.'

'Thak you, Sam,' I said. 'Can you put me just opposite?'

'Yes, sah; no trouble,' replied the servant, displaying a whole row of ivory. 'I'll just change the napkins.'

Napkins were the great care of Sam's life. He marshaled them and kept them in ranks as much mental effort as a commander-in-chief before a battle. He pondered deeply a few moments, took up my napkin, and finally made an exchange with one opposite to Miss Dallas.

'You can sit here now, sah,' [illegible] to you, sah, indeed.'

This masterly maneuver being completed, I left the dining-room and an unlighted cigar in my teeth.

In fifteen minutes the gong sounded, and Sam, still grinning, stepped out on the porch, hammering his infernal machine.

'That will do, Sam,' says I, stopping my ears. 'Have they come down?'

'Yes sir,' said Sam. 'They're just taking their seats now.'

I tossed my cigar out into the road, strolled into the dining-room and took my way toward my chair. Sure enough there on the other side of the table sat my lady friend, and beside her a white-haired old gentleman, and a pleasant faced lady. I seated myself with a slight grating of my chair. In an instant I found myself looking into her deep liquid eyes, while a glad surprise shone in her face. She whispered a few words to the old gentleman, and he looked up and smiled at me.

'How do you do, sir?' he exclaimed. 'I really must thank you sincerely for your bold act. Let me shake hands with you.'

He extended his arm frankly across the table, and I raised mine to respond.

Then occured one of those unforeseen accidents which forever remain unexplicable. I do not know how it happened. Peyton's loaded revolver was still in my breast pocket. I lifted the muzzle of it in raising my arm, and in an instant there was an explosion within my vest which seemed to tear me to atoms. I felt a leaden weight in my chest, and turned [illegible] I tried in vain to stop it, but just before it reached the ground the agony of feeling seemed emerged into a deeper pain, and I floated on into space. Then 'my pulses closed their gates with a shock on my heart,' the ceiling spun around, and all thought stopped.

* * * * *

Suddenly I found myself oppressed by a painful problem. Cerebration was commencing again. The problem was, what happened after a great accident befell me once upon a time. I caught up two or three threads of thought, and dropped them again, hopelessly. I could not fix my mind. At least, like the rapid unrolling of a panorama, the whole explanation dawned upon me. I remembered the whole course of accidents, and found myself lying in bed with bandages tightly corded around me. Then I opened my eyes slowly and looked.

The first object that met my gaze was Miss Dallas. She was sitting near by, and had evidently been watching me, though just now she was looking at the clock.

'Five,' I heard her murmur, 'and the doctor said he would become conscious about this time. I wonder how soon? Poor brave fellow.'

My heart gave a great throb of joy, and I closed my eyes as she turned toward me. She laid her cool hand—

By the way, reader, I have utterly neglected to inform you that I was already, in slang phrase, a 'gone gozlin.' I now parenthetically impart to you the astounding secret that I had been utterly and hopelessly in love with this fair creature since the moment that I thrust the ten foot pole between her and a cruel fate.

She laid her cool, supple hand on my forehead, and then on my wrist. I could bear it no longer, and so I looked and gazed full in her face. She released my hand with a cry that was half astonishment, half joy.

'Miss Dallas?' I asked difficultly.

'Yes, Mr. Sheldon,' she replied. 'How do you feel, sir?'

'Very weak,' I said. 'Is this wound mortal?'

'Oh, no, sir,' she said her lips turning pale, 'only very dangerous. We are to take good care of you; that's all.'

'Are you,' I said. 'Well, I'll ask a favor. Please give me your hand.'

'Certainly,' she said, putting it out frankly.

It was not until my eager fingers closed upon it that she understood my meaning. She made a faint effort to disengage herself.

The color shot in her cheek, playing across her fine face like the changing flash of Northern lights. She trembled as she felt herself thus suddenly challenged to the new departure. It was the climax of her youthful life, and she stood confused and silent upon its perilous verge. Still holding her hand in my passionate grasp, I drew her fair head down and planted the first kiss of love upon her lips. Then she fled from the room in fright.

That kiss was a powerful tonic. As Aunt Hetty would say of her elecampane, it was 'both heatin' and coolin' and desperate strengthenin'.' The doctor was agreeably astonished at the rapid healing of my wound. He gravely agreed that there was nothing like good nursing. I felt the truth of this last opinion, but I never passed such an insufferably long two months in my life.

I know that according to the good old proverb, Minnie Dallas and I should have repented at leisure. So, perhaps, we did that we hadn't known each other sooner.

THE ELECTIONS.

The only returns yet received relative to elections, at the hour of going to press, from Ohio and Pennsylvania are very incomplete, only a few counties being heard from, which indicate an increased Republican majority. The Radicals claim Ohio by 25,000, and Pennsylvania by 20,000.

The New York Democratic State Convention convened at Rochester yesterday. A general row was expected.—Whitley Commercial.

The row did not occur, as fondly anticipated by some, and the Republicans carried off the premium on getting up a first-class row, the week before, to the disgust of everybody. Because the Republicans disgrace themselves at their convention the Reps. wanted the Democrats to do the same thing. This is the way the corruptions of New York were brought about. The example was set by the Radicals but the Democrats couldn't stand the abuse quite so long as the Rads. hence the expose.

The whole cost of twenty-four years of Democratic administration, including the Mexican and Indian wars was $389,182,306,29, about as much as it cost two (or years of Grant.

Grant's idea of reforming the civil service consists of selling the offices to the highest bidder. The theory is that only the most respectable men can afford to pay the highest price.

The "importance of a vote" is exhibited in the late California election where the Democratic assemblymen in Tulare county was elected by two majority, and the Democratic senator in Santa Cruz District by nine.

The interesting enquiry in Washington just now who is to pay for the magnificent stables now being erected in the rear of the White House for the accommodation of the President's stud, inasmuch as Congress made no appropriation for that purpose. These stables are about two hundred feet long. They are being built of the celebrated Seneca stone, and will cost about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Wendell Phillips gets off some good things in his speeches. In fact he very seldom makes an address without a palpable hit. Here is his latest, in a speech in Massachusetts the other day:

"I would like to see a Legislature that would stand up against the Hoosac Tunnel and the Boston and Albany and the Hartford and Erie railroads. I'd like to see a man outside the Worcester Insane Asylum tell me of a Legislature which could be got to do anything which the National banks forbid. You think you are freemen, but each of you has a bank bill pasted over your mouth. (A voice, 'I hain't.') Ah, my friend, you have three—one over your eyes, one over your ears, and one over your mouth."

Our Candidates.

Some weeks since we took occasion to speak in just terms of commendation of our esteemed friend Hon. John B. Stoll. We suggested him as a gentleman who we would be glad to support for any position upon our State ticket, which he might desire. Considerations alone, however, of personal friendship for a friend, and an earnest desire to promote his interest, prompted us to thus place Mr. Stoll's name favorably before the public. Since this article was written, through a very general expression of the press and other sources of information, we are satisfied that there is a very decided feeling in this part of the State in favor of adhering to the time-honored usage of the party—the renomination of a successful ticket for a second term.

The present Democratic State officers seem to have given our people general satisfaction; and believing, as we now do, that there will be very little division of opinion in this part of the State as to their re-nomination, we regard it our duty to say so.

The Auditor, Hon. John. C. Shoemaker, (now of this district, but recently of the Second,) is well and favorably known throughout both districts, and enjoys to a high degree the confidence and favor of the masses. In addition to his general repute as a competent and faithful officer, it is known that through his efforts an outrageous wrong—inflicted upon over twenty-five counties of Southern Indiana, by the late Radical State Board of Equalization and Auditor Evans—has been righted, thereby saving to and protecting the people from the payment of over a hundred thousand dollars unlawful and unjust taxation. In the light of these facts, it will not be difficult to understand why this people will not favor turning him away, against the uniform usage of the party, for any new man, however deserving. We shall therefore be found, in the future, until the State convention, doing battle for the renomination of the present State officers.

CHICAGO ON FIRE

AN AWFUL CONFLAGRATION

MILLIONS OF PROPERTY DESTROYED.

Three Miles Square of the City Laid in Ashes.

Every Hotel and Bank in the City Destroyed.

CHICAGO, October 9.—The fire which has been raging here uninterruptedly since 9 a. m., has now spread to and destroyed every hotel of any note in the city. First to succumb to the flames was the Sherman House, a beautiful six-story building. A terrific storm of wind carried the flames over buildings, licking up everything in its pathway, including some of the finest buildings in the West.

The Tremont House was next taken in its course and in a few minutes the entire building was enveloped in flames, the efforts of the firemen proving entirely futile.

The following principal and well known hotels were all laid in ashes together, with many of the business blocks between them: Palmer House, Metropolitan Hotel, Garden City, City Hotel, Briggs House, Pacific House. The Court House took fire three times and was put out, but the attention of firemen having to be divided, it again broke out, and was under such headway before water was turned upon it that in a few minutes, the entire structure was one seething sheet of fire utterly uncontrolable and beyond the reach of all human efforts to save it.

In the cells under the Court House it is reported, on apparently good authority, that from forty to fifty prisoners were incarcerated, and that these poor victims under the excitement and turmoil were lost sight of and burned to death. Other fatalities are reported but how many names cannot at this time be obtained. The loss of life must be very great, and the suffering among all classes especially the poorer class, cannot be depicted. Aid from the leading cities in the country is already coming in. The Railroad companies are offering free transportation from all parts of the country, and for any amount of aid that is offered to the city.

The Pacific House was commenced some eighteen months ago, and was within a few months, of its completion. It was designed to be the finest hotel in the United States, if not on the continent, and covered several acres of ground. Its completion was looked forward to with a great deal of pride, not only to the city of Chicago, but to the country at large.

All the wholesale and retail houses in the heart of the city are destroyed.

The officials are now pulling down and premeditate blowing up buildings to prevent the spreading of the flames. The water-works having been destroyed and most of the engines have been burned.

The origin of the fire is unknown, but it started on Halstead street, and the almost hurricane which blowing across the city carried the flames with it, with great rapidity.

CHICAGO, Oct. 9, 6 a. m.—Lake, Water, Randolph, Washington and Madison-sts. are reduced to ashes. Everything within this territory, embracing over fifty blocks of the finest part of the city of Chicago is totally destroyed. The Michigan Southern, Rock Island and Illinois Central Railroad depots are burned to the ground. The Michigan Southern depot, one of the finest in the country, went like a box of matches. When the flames reach the end of this magnificent structure, the entire building was instantly ablaze, and was in ashes in a twinkling.

The magnificent depot of the Illinois Central, Michigan Central and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroads, at the foot of Lake street, was destroyed in a few seconds, burning like tinder. The flames came down both sides of Lake street, and the depot, together with the Adams and Massasoit house were swept away like kindling wood. There is not a hotel or public building of any importance now left in the city, and the suffering is terrible. Every daily newspaper building in the city is burned, and no papers have been issued since a late hour on Saturday night. The First National Bank, regarded as at the finest fire proof building in the country, is totally destroyed as well as many other structures regarded as totally destroyed.

Oct. 9. 11 a. m.—The work of destruction continues. More than one-half of the city has already been destroyed and the flames continue their progress almost unopposed. At about 1 o'clock this morning the fire crossed the river at the Adams-sts. bridge and soon destroyed the gas works, and then spread itself in every direction, and at this hour almost every building form Harison-st. north to the Chicago River is destroyed with all the insurance offices, banks, hotel, telegraph offices, newspaper offices, Sherman House Chamber of Commerce, Court House, W. U. Telg's building and all part of the city, covering over thirty blocks. The following message signed by the Mayor of Chicago and sent to the Mayor of St. Louis this morning: "Send us food for the suffering, for our city is in ashes, our water works burnt."

THE RESULT.

All the establishments, with the single exception of the Tribune office, which is fire proof, the Court House, Sherman House Tremont, House, Palmer House, new Pacific Hotel, new Bigelow House and in fact every hotel and everything else is swept clean. This district embraces all the heavy business houses in the city. The reign of fire on Sodom and Gomorrah can hardly be compared to the devastating reign of the fire fiend in Chicago. More than one half of the population are now rushing through the streets in in vehicles which are obtained at enormous prices, on foot and in every other way with the choicest household treasures in their arms and on their backs, in utter confusion, not knowing whither to go. Fearful suffering must follow, and almost immediately. Full one hundred and fifty thousand people are at this moment homeless and houseless, not knowing where to lay their heads or get anything to satisfy the cravings of hunger.

THE AWFUL WORK GOES ON.

CHICAGO, Oct 9.—The awful work of destruction goes on with relentless fury. From Harrison street south to Division street and from the river to the lake and four miles long by one wide the flames have swept everything before them. It is estimated that at least one hundred thousand people are homeless and in a suffering condition. The streets in the districts still unburned are lined for miles with such household goods as have been saved from destruction.

Most generous offers of assistance in money, food or any thing wanted are coming from every city and town. The mayor has responded to several offers, asking that cooked food be forwarded as soon as possible. The firemen are on their way here from Cincinnati, St. Louis and other cities. The water works are entirely destroyed. They are now blowing up the buildings on the line of the fire in the attempt to arrest the progress of the flames.

LATER.

It is now believed that the spread of the fire southward has been stayed at Harrison-st, but on the north side there is no diminution in its fury, and that entire division of the city is evidently doomed to utter destruction, and there are grave fears that the flames may spread to the west, west of the North Branch river, and the inhabitants on the streets nearest to the river are already moving to places of supposed greater safety. The Western Union Telegraph Company have now six wires west and south, and running into temporary offices erected at the corner of State and Sixteenth-sts. The Northwest railway is running trains on both of its branches which are crowded. It is now positively asserted by some that the water works are still intact, but that water has been shut off from the south and west divisions, on account of the quantity being used on the north side. A reliable gentleman just arrived from the north division brings the joyful intelligence that the water works are uninjured. God grant that it may be true. It is impossible now to given an approximate correct statement of the losses, but a faint idea may be formed when in the city, except two small saving one, on Twenty-second street, in the south division, and one on Randolph, in the west, are destroyed. All the wholesale stores, and all the large retail establishments. The Post-office, Court House, Chamber of Commerce, and every hotel in the south division, except the Michigan Hotel which is standing on the extreme southern limits of the fire escaped through badly scorched. Every newspaper office, except the Tribune building has finally succumbed. Every theatre, the six largest elevators, the immense depot of the Southern & Illinois railroad, Central railroad, both passenger and freight depots of the latter, and more than a score of churches, and much of the shipping in the river destroyed. Men were millionaires yesterday morning are nearly penniless to-day, but were terrible than all is the awful certainty that many human beings have found fiery graves. How many no one can ever tell. Perhaps no one can ever tell but some are known to have perished, and there is heart sickning fear that the victims of the fiend monster may be counted by hundreds. Horses and cows have been burned in the stables, on the north side. Numbers, though released from confinement were bewildered and confused by the sea of fire which surrounded them that they rushed wildly to and fro uttering cries of until scorched and killed. Any attempt at a description of this appalling calamity would be idle to the simple facts, that the one great city of Chicago is destroyed; that hundreds of millions of capital have vanished, and that nearly one-third of her inhabitants are homeless, dependants are enough. Any attempt to embelish would be but mockery.

All business and work is suspended and every one is interested in securing First something to eat and next—shelter. The suffering on the North Side is heart-rending. Men, women and children—50,000 of them are huddled together like so many wild beasts, and in other places 17,000 Germans and Irish are praying for bread; who know not which way to turn or what to say.

HEARTBROKEN PARENTS

The Indianapolis fire department is here doing good service. Springfield and Peoria have done nobly, contributing largely. The evening Journal got out a half sheet to-night, and the other papers follow to-morrow, some presses having been found. The residences of Horace White and Wm. Bross, of the Tribune, were consumed. The residences of Mr. Cowles, of the Times, and Mr. Wilson, of the Journal were also destroyed. Mr. Story was more fortunate.

There is a rumor that in a blacksmith shop on Rush-st., the bodies of 15 men were found

BURNED TO A CRISP,

they having rushed into the shop to escape from the flames, which had discovered their peril. Immense numbers of people are missing, and for the purpose of ascertaining the discovery of the missing ones, a central inteligence office has been established, where the names of all missing ones will be registered, and they are given to the police.

THE FIRE OUT.

CHICAGO Oct. 10.—A heavy rain fell last night and the fire is all out.

The fire continued to burn al last night in the North Side, but this morning is under control. It is literally true to say that one side from the river to North Lincoln Park on the west to the lake on the east, that portion of the city except along the main river where there are business blocks, was occupied by dwellings, and two-thirds of the population are Germans and Scandinavians. These are now homeless and are in some buildings on the northwest sections and others on the prairies without shelter throughout the day. Yesterday a renewal of the fires on the West Side was looked for, and a change in the direction of the wind at any time would have led to that result, and there would literally have been no refuge for any. Every one had their clothing packed ready to start for the prairies at any moment, but God averted this last addition to our disaster and at sundown the wind lulled.

At three o'clock this morning the rain so frequently prayed for came. It did not rain long, but the roofs in the houses and ground had been wet so that now it is possible to have a cook food for the multitude. A few business men with some nerve are seeking houses for business on the West Side. Rooms that rented last week for $50, now readily command $5,000.

Water for drinking and household use is procured from the lake, and for parks and houses from the river. There are a thousand people camped about the artesians wells, four miles out, and perhaps as many more at Lake view and on Fulton-ave., near the prairie. The people are being fed in the remaining churches, school houses, in sheds, and by the roadside. It was cold and chilly this morning, causing great suffering, but it is now clearing up again.

HOW THE FIRE ORIGINATED.

Last Sunday a boy went into a stable on Duquesne-st., near the river on the West Side, to milk a cow, taking with him a kerosene lamp. This was knocked over by the cow and the burning fluid was scattered among the straw. This was the beginning of the fire. A single extinguisher on the ground or active work of the police in tearing down one or two shanties would have prevented the spread of the flames, but the engines were waited for, and when they arrived the firemen were stupefied by their exertions at the fire on Saturday night. They worked slowly and clumsy and their efforts were unavailing. The wind from the southwest blew a gale. Rapidly the flames shot from house to house and from board yard to board yard until the district burned the night before was reached. In the meantime the flames had crossed the river north of Twelfth street on the South Side and made for a brick and stone business block, the railroad freight depots and the manufacturing establishments. When the full extent of the danger was realized for the first time the fire department was already tired out but worked like heroes. The mayor and city government that had so finely rested now began to exert themselves, but the opportunity had been lost. The time when a thorough organization could have blown up the buildings or prepared for any emergency was neglected. It was a fight for life. The wind blowing, a stiff gale had posession of the flames and the beautiful buildings, Chicago's glory, were laid low before them. Harrison, Van Buren, Monroe Adams, and Madison were soon reached. Intervening blocks from the river to Dearborn street and east of them were consumed. Three quarters of a mile of brick blocks were destroyed as if by magic. It being sunday proprietors and employees were at home utterly unconscious of what was transpiring. Those who saw the flames supposed they were the remains of Saturday night, and having confidence in the fire department were unconcerned, but between 11 and 12 o'clock a rumor got abroad that the fire was in the business part of the city. Then the people commenced running and horses were brought into requisition to take the proprietors and others to the scene of conflagration. What a scene met their gaze! The Board of Trade, Court House, Western Union Telegraph and Associated Press office and hundreds of other buildings were all aflame. The air was filled with live coals which were hurled from the north and east. The Times, Tribune, Post, Republican, Journal and other newspaper offices with Western News Company's Block, Field & Leiter's establishment Grave's block, recently built, and Farwell & Company all were soon in ashes. It seemed that no sooner had the flames struck a wall than it went through, and in a very few minutes sufficed to destroy the most elaborately built structure—the walls melted and the very bricks were consumed. The wooden pavements took fire and there was one continuous sheet of flame two miles long by one mile wide.

Fire Elsewhere.

TOLEDO, Oct. 9—The last train from the East was a freight which arrived at 10 o'clock. The country is all burned up between New Haven and Defiance. The conductor reports that five miles of fire were running behind him as he came between Defiance and Emerald. The lines are all down and we have no word or knowledge of trains. Number 10 regular through freight train is near Woodburn. Sixteen cars of corn have been burned to the ground. Engine No. 26 is off the track. Woodburn is burned to the ground. Two of the finest houses in the county were burned to the ground before they could be rescued. People were running to the river, while animals, bears, wolves, etc., are running to the streams for protection. Mr. Ray's farm which is situated west on the prairie is in great danger as the prairies are in flames, and the sight beggars description. The yellow flames are rushing over the prairie like an avenging angel, carrying destruction in their track.

There are nine or ten freight trains between Fort Wayne and this city, of which we have no record. They are in all probability most of them destroyed.

MONTEITH, Mich., Oct. 9.—The fire this morning, is playing destruction on the Michigan Lake Shore Railroad at Holland. The long trestle work south of Holland is burned, also several culverts. About six miles of road is devastated; one freight and passenger train is north of the fire and the others are south of it; the gap between them is about four miles.

ONE hundred families have been burned out of house and home by the terrible fires in Wisconsin, and at least one hundred other families are still in danger. The fire has extended across the Fox River, and it now covers three thousand square miles of territory. The efforts of the whole population have been futile in quelling the conflagration. The report is that the entire country is devastated, and starvation threatens the inhabitants.

MONROEVILLE, Ind., Oct. 9, 11 a. m.—The flames are beginning to fall into our little town from the south. The wood, fields of corn, fences and residences are burning, but it is hoped we can save our buildings.

A distinguished official of a State adjoining New York found himself in the train from Washington to your city, and it was so crowded that he could not obtain a seat. In this emergency he ran against a familiar of Grant, who informed him that the President and his party, then on their way to Long Branch, had a car to themselves, and invited the uncomfortable official to join them. He did so, and found Gen. Grant surrounded by his peculiar set, and well supplied with liquor and cigars. Our friend was invited to partake, and, accepting the last named only from the hands of the President, attempted to smoke, but, although used to the practice, found the cigar too strong. He so expressed himself, when Grant said gruffly:

"They don't hurt me."

The night was spent in stories, drinking, and smoking, of which two last the President partook freely; but this was the last and only observation that fell from his executive lips. He was not in a condition to converse even if he had possessed the capacity.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid Liver and Bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist, there is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No System of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO. of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonably desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and work side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk. Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

Fire.—We learn that the dwelling of Mr. Joel Brand, Esq., residing north of Waterloo, in Smithfield township, caught fire early on the morning of Wednesday Oct. 4th, and was entirely destroyed, together with about all its contents. This is a serious misfortune, especially with winter but a few days off and no shelter nor scarcely time to prepare one for the accommodation of the houseless family.

Did Right.— Everything looked so threatening last Monday evening, that our Town Board considered it necessary to appoint night watchmen to keep a sharp lookout for fire. Railroad hands were about, many of them on a bender, and consequently the danger was increased. The wind blew hard from the south, and had a fire occurred, everything north of it must have been destroyed. We are glad to notice this prompt action of the Board. They did exactly right, and the people will stand by them. The exercise of good judgement and fore-thought will always receive the approval of the citizens.

Beware of Counterfeits.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All [illegible] should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Block. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

[illegible] day. The wind blew a perfect gale, and the knowledge that the woods in various parts of county were on fire, served to render the prospect indeed gloomy. Then the weather was far from promising rain. And then [illegible] all [illegible] the news from Chicago that made the heart sick. Taken all in all we never want to see another such a day.

[illegible].—Our [illegible] J. H. Ehlers, Esq., has just received a very fine, large and beautiful assortment of Toys, which are now displayed in his popular establishment, a few doors north of seventh street [illegible] everything in this line that [illegible] fancy of our young folks could wish, and they are new and novel. No old stock kept over from last winter, but fresh from the manufactory.—Go and see them by all means.

Played.—We made a brief visit to Butler yesterday and there learned the melancholy news of the demise of the Butler Herald, published at Toledo. How fast misfortunes follow upon each other. First, the fire at Chicago, next the above terrible intelligence. Like a bright star in the heavens it dazzles for awhile and then "scoots" out like a flash. Come again bright days. Ever of thee, etc. Good bye neighbor. We forgive you. Farewell!

J. S. Ferdon, Esq., of Jackson, well known in connection with the furniture trade of this place, gave us a brief visit to-day. We regard Mr. Ferdon as one of the finest business men in the country possessing those rare qualities that always insure success, and enjoying an enviable reputation as an honest and straight-forward business man. With such men at the helm there is no danger of being wrecked, if good sound judgment and a thorough business knowledge is all that is required. We hope he may conclude to locate with us again.

Serious Accident.—We learn that Moss Ashleman met with quite a serious accident last Friday evening, near the brick kiln south of town. He and another man were unloading slabs from a wagon, Mr. A. standing in front. As they were throwing one from the wagon Mr. A. lost his ballance, and fell against the horses. They started forward, kicking Mr. A. several times, and he fell between them, the front wheel passing over his chest without doing any injury, and the hind wheel crushing and breaking several ribs on his left side. Dr. Casebeer was called and he is improving.

Destructive Fires.

The excessive dry weather which has been of unprecedent duration in this region of country, is proving very disastrous in many localities, in the way of fires, that are almost impossible, owing to the dryness existing to subdue. For a distance of twenty-five miles along the Wabash railroad, east of Fort Wayne, the entire country has been devastated by a conflagration which has raged uninterruptedly for three or four days. In order to save personal effects, houses, barns, etc., farmers are obliged to plow around them for a considerable distance. The loss of cord-wood, fences and timber is almost incalculable. The fire is still raging, but hopes are entertained of getting it under subjection. Similar conflagrations are reported at many other points.

Heathenism.—We learn that there are some very wild characters who congregate at a school house, some six miles east of town where religious services are often held, for their especial benefit. The elder who generally officiates insists, however, on good order in the house during services, and this forces these gay roosters to the outside, where their little tricks are indulged in. As may be inferred the feeling towards the elder is not of the most friendly nature, and various means are resorted to express their disgust of him. Last Sabbath evening, a little dog accompanied the elder to church, but was captured by these "border ruffians," before he entered the house, and his tail severed rather close to his body. There was some "yow-yowing" about that time, to the infinite disgust of all good people, and the extreme delight of the "heathens" on the outside.

It is to be hoped that these occurrences will be stopped and the parties brought to justice.

Richland Township Sabbath School Association.

The several schools of Richland Township, met at Corunna, on last Thursday to enjoy their annual pic-nic. The attendance was not as large as usual on such occasions, perhaps on account of the dust, which rendered it everything but pleasant and agreeable. The following schools were present:

Corunna School, Richland Union School, West Richland School, and a portion of the Benton Union School. The latter from Smithfield township, bore a conspicious part in the exercises, by singing some of the most beautiful songs. We think they took the laurels in singing.—Their banner bore the incription, "We Have Seen the Star and Have Come to Worship it." The exercises before noon consisted of songs and addresses. At 12 o'clock the assembly was dismissed for dinner, and all enjoyed a pleasant time for nearly two hours, when they were again called to order, and after listening to a song by the Benton School, were interested by Rev. Ward, who in his usual style delivered a very interesting address. His remarks were timely full of meaning, and highly instructive to all present. He concluded by telling a story for the little folks.

Mr. Griswold was then called upon for a speech, he at first declined, but being insisted upon to speak said that if they would promise to be very attentive, for three minutes, he would give them a short speech. His remarks were confined principally to contrasting his childhood days with the present, with reference to Sabbath Schools, after which a song was given by the Corunna School. Officers were lected for the next year, after which it was decided that the next association be held at Sedan.

The State Fair.

We went down to the State Fair last Thursday, to see the sights, and were well paid for our pains. The attendance was very large, perhaps 50,000 people on the ground during that day. The display in the various departments excelled all previous efforts both as to number and quality. We made a hasty survey of the stock department and saw some of the finest breeds now in the country.

Just think of a common milch cow weighing 23,000 pounds, or a calf eight months old weighing 800 pounds. Think of an ox taller than any horse in the country, over six feet high, and though poor, weighing 27,000 pounds, yet these were all to be seen together with sheep, hogs and horses equally as fine. We regard this as the most interesting feature of a fair, and enjoy it more than any other. Even the fast horses were fine, trotting on a half mile track in 2:28.

The fair passed off without accident, and was perhaps as fine an exhibition as has been seen in any part of our country during the year. We are obliged to many of the officers for special favors during our stay. The courtesy which the Board exhibits towards the press is, and surely ought to be, appreciated by its representatives, and we admire the good judgement shown in this regard.

Sedan Brevities.

New Store.—Mr. Thomas Smith has purchased the stock of goods belonging to Mr. Samuel Houser, and refitted the old store building with a nice assortment of dry goods and groceries. Mr. S. is an old citizen of Sedan, and will deal on the 'square" with those who favor him with a call.

Some dirty person has been ejecting tobbacco juice on the floor in the new church. We do not hesitate to assert that the person who committed this indecency would kick a blind dog and steal his bone.

Young ladies wear so much false hair, with their own, that it is difficult to tell which is "switch."

It has been rumored that Sedan did not afford a grain market, which is a mistake Our popular townsman, Messrs. Green & Urie, are paying the highest market price for grain. Farmers bring along your wheat.

Removed.—Our eminent physicians, Messrs Sebring & Mason, have removed their office in the building formerly occupied by W. F. Smith, where prescriptions will be carefully compounded and all professional calls promptly attended to.

G. M. C.

Fire Everywhere.—Not only is Chicago visited with the firey demon, but the whole country around us is being devastated by fire. The excessively dry season has been fraught with more disastrous results than ever before know. In various sections of the county fires have raged with great fury, and considerable damage has been done about a mile north of town The woods have been ablaze for several days, and our citizens have been called out to help subdue the flames. Mader's property, north of town, has been threatened, and it was only by the most strenuous efforts that his house and barn was saved. On the south the cranberry marsh has been burnt, and the fire communicated to the woods and fields adjoining. Ft. Wayne has been threatened, and the excitement has been intense. We learn from the Gazette that the prairie, known as the Godfrey prairie, has been thoroughly devastated by the fiery element, leaving nothing but a large track of black ashes. The fire is still burning on this prairie, not so extensively as before, and unless the wind fans it into life, we think that no further danger may be anticipated from this quarter.

About five miles beyond, however, the flames have acquired an immense headway, and, are spreading with great rapidity. The woods and prairies were literally a sheet of fire, and many corn fields, several barns, and quite a large amount of other property had been destroyed. The men within a radius of several miles had turned out, and about two hundred of them were yesterday engaged in a desperate attempt to subdue them. A strong wind was blowing from the south-west, and it will require every effort of the men who are fighting the element to stop its further headway.

The fire in the neighborhood of Lindenwood Cemetry, which was burning with considerable violence on Sunday, is now nearly extinguished although the fire is still burning in one corner of the field.—The strong winds, however, may again cause the fire to break out, and if so all due diligence should be used in preventing the flames reaching Lindenwood Cemetery or the acqueduct. In case the latter structure were destroyed our supply of water would be almost entirely cut off, and the city would be left at the mercy of the fire fiend. The steamer, Frank Randall, will we understand, be detailed to protect this property.

Our reporter went for some distance towards the fire which was raging west of the city, but not being able to reach the spot, he was compelled to take the reports of persons coming from the scene. They stat, that the fire is raging with intense violence, near the farm of Adam Link, about four miles West of the city, and that it has already taken hold of Mr. Link's property, sweeping away his corn fields, fences, hay stacks, sheds, etc. The fire is raging with intense violence over a considerable area of timothy. Every effort possible is being made to conquer the element, but the bright light in the heavens in that direction at a late hour last night, shows that it is still burning.

A young lady at an evening party found it hard to use the expression, 'Jordan is a hard road to travel,' but substituted the following: 'Perambulating progressing in pedestrian excursion along the farfamed thoroughfare of fortune cast up by the banks of the sparkling river of Palestine is indeed attended with a heterogeneous conglomeration of unforseen difficulties.'

Notice to Taxpayers.

The corporation taxes of the town of Auburn DeKalb County, Indiana, for the year 1871 are as follows:

Fifty cents on each $1 00 valuation and twenty-five cents on each taxable poll.

The coporation taxes of said town are now due and will be received by the undersigned at Guy Plum's Law Office in said town from the 31st day of August 1871 to the 30th day of November 1871.

James L. Perry Town Marshal.

Political Items.

Boutwell and his bankers are the only [illegible] satisfied with its recent financial achievements.

Butler says that [illegible] Boutwell for that length of time.

It is now claimed that the Radical [illegible] the Southern States [illegible] two hundred and twenty-six millions of dollars.

Senator Trumbull, of Illinois, is in favor of general amnesty. Grant is opposed to it, [illegible] in the Senate, [illegible] Southern States in 1872.

It is stated that at Grass Valley, California, on election day, bodies of men publicly paraded and demanded large sums of money for their votes, which were readily paid by Radical leaders—advocates of the purity of elections.

Nearly all the members of General Grant's Cabinet are absent, making political speeches, in States where elections are to be held. Such things used to be called disreputable, but anything is sacred it to the present administration.

A misguided Milwaukee paper says 'Grant and Boutwell paid nine and a quarter millions of the public debt in August. The writer might as well tell us that the President and Superintendent of the Northwestern Railroad are in the habit of hauling fifty or sixty trains into Chicago every day.—Chicago Republican, Radical.

The Chicago Journal, a paper devoted to the President, says that when in that city he stated emphatically that he know the charges made by the New York Tribune against Thomas Murphy, Collector, were false. The President is twice mistaken. The Tribune did not make charges. It proved Murphy a shoddy swindler. The President knows nothing about it.—Cincinnati Com.

In a speech delivered at Philadelphia, the other day, Mr. Geo. Robeson, of the Navy Department, said that President Grant was one of the men who joined the Republican party 'because of the principles it holds and attitude it assumes.' Considering that President Grant never joined the Republical party until he was nominated as its candidate, this assertion is worthy of its author.

The telegraph inform us that the editor of the New York Times has been presented with a purse $50,000 by the Union League Club in recognition of his services in blowing up Tammany. This was expected, at least, by him. He has been howling for money, not for principles. Every word published in the Times has been published with a view of either making Tammany "come down" or of securing a shake purse from the Radicals.

A Correspondent of the New York Sun says, that twenty-five delegates, who were elected as out-and-out Fenton men were bribed, at the Syracuse Convention by Murphy and deserted their friends. Names and residences were given. Twenty-one of them are reported to be located as follows: Five in Madison, three in Wayne three in Jefferson, three in Washington, three in Cortland, two in Broome, one in Ontario, and one in Albany.

Keep up the fires. Half the diseases that afflict humanity at this season of the year are due to the half chilled condition in which people live. More coughs, colds, consumptions, and fevers are produced by sitting in half chilly rooms, on those days when it seems hardly necessary to build fires, than from all other causes.'

You can buy, at the popular Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block, Ft Wayne, Ind., good all wool casimere suits for ten dollars, better ones $15, and the best for $18. Call and see them.

Insurance.—Those desiring insurance from loss by fire, can now be accommodated. We have been appointed agent for the Phœnix of New York, a company representing a capital of $1,800,000. Call at the Courier office. tf.

The best preventative against the rusting of iron and steel tools is a thin coat of heavy, thick crude lubricating petroleum.

Married.—At M. E. Church, Corunna, Sabbath evening, Oct. 8th, 1871, by Rev. A. W. Lamport, Mr. M. P. Long, of this place, and Miss Vianna Stonebraker, of Corunna.

The above affair took our citizens somewhat by surprise, as our friend Mike has always been considered one of the knowing ones, and no fool on a "hoss" race. However, he has distanced all competitors in securing a Stonebraker, one in whom he may well place every confidence as to final success, in the new position just attained. This in conjunction with murdering bovines, will yield pleasure and wealth and life will pass like an April day.

Michael, we wish you and your fair, beautiful bride a pleasant, long journey adown life's meandering stream, and at short intervals may Long ones come to cheer the heart with joy. Long may you wave, Mike, the same genial, clever, whole-souled fellow that you are. To the handsome bride we return thanks for a glorious big cake with the following inscription:

"To the Printer
Vianna,
Mike."

The inscription took us. Like Pickwick, we wanted to weep but the devil was at work, with fiendish smile ready to annihilate its beauty, when we exclaimed:

Devil, spare those words
Harm not a single letter,
'Twas a friend that placed it there
And we oughten to forget her.

He desisted, when our three year old rushed in and took the top off in a jiffy. (That boy has a penchant for letters, especially when they are interred in sugar.)

May love and good cheer
Ever attend the happy pair
Through this life,
And a calm and peaceful journey
On the sea of matrimony
End their strife.

DIED.—At six o'clock, Thursday evening, Arch Monroe, only son of A. W. and M. E. Lamport, aged about 2 years and 8 months.

Go to thy rest, fair child!
Go to thy dreamless bed,
While yet so gentle, undefiled,
With blessings on thy head.

Ere sin had seared the breast,
Or sorrow woke the tear,
Rise to thy throne of changeless rest,
In yon celestial sphere!

Because thy smile was fair,
Thy lip and eye so bright,
Because thy loving cradle care
Was such a dear delight.

Shall love, with weak embrace,
Thy upward wing detain?
No! gentle angel, seek thy place
Amid the cherub train.

$25. Twenty-five dollars will be paid for a single case of incurable Catarrh. Dr. Merwin's Vegetable Catarrh Cure is the cheapest as a package makes one pint of Medicine, and is sent by mail on receipt of thirty cents. And is the best, because it never fails to cure any case of Catarrh. We wish to send our phamplet, entitled "Men and Women as Invalids," to every reader of this paper, and will mail, free, a dozen or more copies to any person who will hand them to their friends. MARKLEY SHRADER & CO

AN UNWELCOME VISITOR.

A Thrilling Sketch.

Burglars had been very active and bold in their operatians in our city but as the thermometer had marked above the nineties for several days, and I had little of value in my room, I preferred to risk that little and leave my window open, although of easy access, [illegible]. If an uninvited guest made his appearances, and I did not awake, he would not disturb me; if I did awake, I could feign sleep and let him take what ever he might find. "Burglars," I argued with myself, "do not generally commit personal violence, if they can accomplish their [illegible] and make good their escape without it."

These were my reflections every night as I undressed and threw myself on my bed leaving my castle open to the enemy. I had been asleep one night about an hour, when I was awakened [illegible] ing my eyes, I saw the gas burning, and a tall broad shouldered man with his back turned towards me, his face looking over his shoulder to see whether the noise had awakened me. Our eyes met, and my plan to feign sleep would have been useless. My self-posession did not, however forsake me. What followed illustrates the value of presence of mind.

Opposite the side of my bed, and about eight feet from it, was the door of my room, two or three feet from which were the stairs leading down to the lower hall The burglar must have used a ladder in ascending the roof from which he entered the window.—It was some thirty feet to the ground, and isolated. My plan was, not only to escape harm myself, but to effect his capture. I knew the policeman's beat, and he would pass in a short time.

Sitting bolt upright, then, as I opened my eyes and saw the burglar, looking very unpleasant at me, I said, rubbing my eyes drowsily—although, to tell the truth, I never was more wide awake in my life: "Hello, John, what are you looking for? Can't you come in my room without making such a confounded noise?"

The fellow taken somewhat aback at being addressed in this way, said, in a low but menacing voice and pointing a a revolver at me.

"Shut up! what do you take me for?"

"I took you for John I replied, with a well assumed nonchalance

"But I didn't suppose he was after anything valuable in my room, except one thing, and—by the way, if you are not the unluckiest fellow in the world."

"How is that?" growled my visitor.

"Well, I have a very good watch; but if you want to get it, you must pay a visit to the watchmaker's after you leave here, for I had what I considered the bad, but what now seems the good fortune, to break the spring yesterday, and left it for repairs."

"You're a precious cool one!" he said evidently astonished at my indifference.

"What's the use of my getting excited or attempting to resist you? You are armed, and you see I am not.—And if you had no weapon, your fighting weight must be at least thirteen stone, while mine is not more than nine and a half. I have no idea of interfering with you. If the room were filled with diamonds, I would not lift my finger to save them. Take all you can find; I am going to sleep—so don't make any more noise."

"Hold on," said the fellow; "where,s your keys?"

"I suppose you want to make as much of a haul as you can," I said; "so look in my pants hanging over the bedpost there, and you'll find my pocket-book, with a few stamps in it."

It was nearly time for the policeman to pass, and I paused to listen. I must, in a few moments. put my plan into execution.

A glance quick as lighting showed me that the key of the door was on the outside.

My listening expression did not escape the sharp and practiced eye of my grim visitor. It was a curious scene, no doubt. I setting in my bed, in my night-clothes, unarmed, and this stalwart ruffian, pistol in hand, glaring half suspiciously, half ferociously at me, and almost in the crouching attitude of a tiger about to spring upon his prey. But there I sat, coolly conversing with him, the necessity of the moment keeping my wits too wide awake to allow my fears to get the upper hand for an instant.

"What are you listening to?" asked the burglar.

"I thought I heard a cry of fire."

In that instant, and in the dead stillness of the night, I heard the tramp of the policeman. It was some distance off.

"You will find," I said "some clothes of mine in the press; they will, however, be to small for you. Good night; the keys are in the middle drawer."

He turned to the drawer, indicated and as he did so, with one tremendous bound I cleared the space behind my bed and the door, slammed the door and locked it upon him. Oblivious of my dishabille, [illegible] to the street. I had two flights to descend and the door to open before I could reach the yard but it was hardly possible for him to [illegible] the ladder [illegible]. [illegible] rather than [illegible] down the [illegible], I flung back the [illegible] it in the yard. He [illegible] way down the ladder. Shouting [illegible] loudly, I seized the ladder at the bottom, and, using all my power, brought it and the burglar to the ground with a crash. The pistol he held in his hand fell from his grasp. I made a dash for it, and he, springing to his feet like a cat, rushed at me, and, as I stopped, seized me by the nape of the neck. I turned the pistol upward and pulled the trigger. It merely snapped—there were no more charges in it. With a terrible oath, the baffled villain wrenched the wea on from my grasp and raised it aloft to deal me what might have proved a fatal blow, when there was a rush behind him and he was felled to the ground. The policeman had heard my shout, and came just in time to rescue me.

The burglar was soon secured, and in my excitement I was about to relate the story I have here told, when the policeman with a smile, suggested that I might "ketch cold in them clothes!" I then remembered for the first time since I had sprung from bed, that I was shoeless and stockingless and had nothing on but my night shirt, and I beat a hasty retreat. With a long-drawn breath, I took my fine gold repeater, which had had such a narrow escape, and was not at the watchmaker's after all, from under my pillow, looked at the hour, turned in, and after a little while fell asleep.

It is almost needless to add that the above story, narrated afterwards to a jury, [illegible] the policeman interrupted me, had the effect of giving the visitor lodgings in a public institution, and secured me against a repetition of his call for at least ten years.

A Horrible Plaything.

The Bedford Republican publishes the following snake stories, and says they can be substantiated by indisputable testimony. They are only some of the trifling experiences of the mountaineers with the rattlesnakes:

"There are in the Blue Ridge two distinct species—the yellow and the black. The yellow was formerly supposed to be the male, and the black the female; but the fallacy of that opinion is demonstrated by the fact that in many localities only one of these kinds is ever seen, and also by the great difference in size and form—the yellow being very thick and short, and the black long ang slender. Both of these species are beatifully ornamented with flowers, which in the sunlight partake of all the colors of the rainbow. The yellow snake is much less liable to rattle than the black, and therefore most to be dreaded, though no dependence need be placed in either, as it depend-altogether upon the caprice of the mosment when they retreat, advance, rattle tor 'play possum.' The partiality of his snake for the company of children, has been frequently noticed among the mountaineers, one instance of which is familiar to some of our Bedford readers. A few years ago, a farmer whose cabin stood in one of the wildest localities about the mountains, on coming into the house one day, discovered his little daughter, two years old, sitting up in bed, where she had been placed when asleep by her mother. The child was laughing immoderately, and showing by its every action and expression of countenance that it was greatly pleased. The father approached, when, to his horror, he discovered that an enormous yellow rattlesnake, the largest he had ever seen, was in bed with the child, and actually coiled around her body.—His presence instantly wrought a change in the conduct of the snake, which dexterously uncoiled itself from around the child and assumed an attitude of battle. The mountaineer's rifle hung up on brackets over the door, he [illegible] it in his hand with a feeling which cannot be described, and awaited an opportunity to shoot. He had no sooner [illegible] than the snake commenced caressing the child, laying its head fondly [illegible] cheek, and darting its forked tongue almost in her eyes. Then he would rattle his tail and [illegible] which seemed to [illegible] the child, who was greatly delighted. But upon the least movement on the part of the almost distracted parent, the snake would change the tone of his rattling, and swell to almost twice its natural size. [illegible] the child grasped the snake with her chubby little hands, and jerked and twisted him about in a very rude and unceremonious manner laughing and talking to her horrid plaything in a perfect ecstacy of delight. This state of things was finally ended by a movement of the parent, which so angered the snake that he drew himself up into a tight coil, leaped out of the bed, and would have [illegible] had he not quickly dodged to one side. As it was the serpent went over his shoulder and out of the door, where it renewed the signal for battle, but was quickly stretched out stiff in death by a shot from the rifle. The child cried immoderately for her pretty plaything, and if set down in any part of the yard, would immediately toddle towards the dead reptile.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Beneath the moonlight and the snow
Lies dead my latest year;
The winter winds are wailing low
Its dirges in my ear.

I grieve not with the moaning wind
As if a loss befell;
Before me, even as behind,
God is, and all is well!

His light shines on me from above,
His low voice speaks within,—
The patience of immortal love
Outwearying mortal sin.

Not mindless of the growing years
Of care and loss and pain,
My eyes are wet with thankful tears
For blessings which remain.

If dim the gold of life has grown,
I will not count it dross,
Nor turn from treasures still my own
To sigh for lack and loss.

The years no charm from Nature take;
As sweet her voices call,
As beautiful her mornings break,
As fair her evenings fall.

Love watches o'er my quiet ways,
Kind voices speak my name,
And lips that find it hard to praise
Are slow, at least, to blame.

How softly ebb the tides of will!
How fields, once lost or won,
Now lie behind me green and still
Beneath a level sun!

How hushed the hiss of party hate,
The clamor of the throng!
How old, harsh voices of debate
Flow into rhythmic song!

Methinks the spirit's temper grows
Too soft in this still air,
Somewhat the restful heart foregoes
Of needed watch and prayer.

The bark by tempest vainly tossed
May founder in the calm,
And he who braved the polar frost
Faint by the isles of balm.

Better than self-indulgent years
The outflung heart of youth,
Than pleasant songs in idle ears
The tumult of the truth.

Rest for the weary hands is good,
And love for hearts that pine,
But let the manly habitude
Of upright souls be mine.

Let winds that blow from heaven refresh,
Dear Lord, the languid air;
And let the weakness of the flesh
Thy strength and spirit share.

And if the eye must fail of light,
The ear forget to hear,
Make clearer still the spirit's sight,
More fine the inward ear!

Be near me in mine hours of need
To soothe, or cheer, or warn,
And down these slopes of sunset lead
As up the hills of morn!

She [illegible] Mechanic.

A young man commenced visiting a young woman, and appeared to be well pleased. One evening he called when it was quite late, which led the young lady to inquire where he had been.

'I had to work to-night.'

'What, do you work for a living?' she inquired in astonishment.

'Certainly,' replied the young man, 'I am a mechanic.'

'I dislike the name of a mechanic,' and she turned up her pretty nose.

That was the last time the young man visited that young lady. He is now a wealthy man, and has one of the best women in the country for his wife.

The lady who disliked the name of a mechanic is now the wife of a miserable fool—a regular vagrant about grog shops—and the soft, verdant, silly, miserable girl is obliged to support herself and children by taking in washing.

You dislike the name of a mechanic, eh? You whose brothers are but well dressed loafers. We pity any girl who is so verdant, so soft, as to think less of a young man for being a mechanic—one of God's noblemen—the most dignified and honorable personage of heaven's creatures.

Beware, young ladies, how you treat young men who work for a living, for you may one day be a menial to one of them yourself.

Far better to discharge the well fed pauper, with all his rings, jewelry, brazenness and pomposity, and take to your affections the callous handed, industrious mechanic.

Thousands have bitterly regretted their folly who have turned their backs to honesty. A few years have taught them a severe lesson.

'Did you say I was not fit to carry swill to swine, sir.'

'I did, sir.'

'Well, sir, I require you here, in the presence of these gentlemen, to recall that insult, or you will have to take the consequences.'

'I am ready, willingly, to repair the injury I have done you.'

'I [illegible] that you [illegible]kly, Mr. Brown.'

Brown turned to the insulted gentleman and said:

'Gentlemen, I have done my friend, Mr. Smith, here, the injustice to say that he was not fit to carry swill to swine, at which he is very indignant. Now, gentleman, I wish to recall that remark and do take great pleasure in saying that Mr. Smith is eminently qualified to carry swill to swine. I hope this apology will be satisfactory to Mr. S. and that his excellent qualifications will be duly appreciated.'

THE SIBYL'S AUGURY.

It was in 1848 that, young in my profession, I settled in Greyburn. I had spent my full term at college, and had also given almost two years of my time to studying and practicing in the hospitals, and I am pleased to be able to state that very shortly after settling in the afore-mentioned place I had as much business as I could conveniently attend to. In two or three cases of fearfully threatening aspect I had met with happy success; and a successful [illegible]. Then, again, being fresh from the very best surgical school in the world—the Academy of Louis XV. in Paris—I very quickly and emphatically made my mark upon the public in the result of several capital operations which I had occasion to perform.

I had been almost a year in Greyburn, and had become so well satisfied with the people, and they, in turn, had given token of being so well satisfied with me, that I had fully concluded to regard it as my permanent abiding place.

It was on a clear, pleasant evening in May that I was visited by a gentleman from the neighboring town of Foxborough. He had called during the day in my absence, and had left his card, with word that he would [illegible]. The card bore the name of 'Asa Gregory, D. Mr. Gregory [illegible] and regarded [illegible] [illegible] his face. Then he [illegible].

His [illegible] daughter—he feared was dying. She had been [illegible] He had called in the best medical skill of his town, but without avail. Physicians [illegible] that her disease was consumption and incurable; but not one of them had arrived at a satisfactory diagnosis of her case. He called upon me. Would I come and examine, and pass my judgment? I told him I would.

On the morrow I rode over to Foxborough, and easily found Mr. Gregory's house. It was one of the prettiest and most sensible-looking dwellings in the place. I found the sick girl in her chamber, dressed in a loose morning robe of violet-colored chamere, and reclining upon a lounge. She was nineteen years of age, of medium stature, and I thought at the time—as I think now—the fairest and most beautiful maiden I had ever seen. I was interested, and resolved that if help lay within my power it should be forthcoming. She evidently read my feelings, for she very soon evinced that my presence was not disagreeable to her. She had told her father that she did not care to see another physician, and this had been told to me, so that I was thus induced to approach her kindly and gently.

I will not trouble the readers with the particulars of my examination. Suffice it to say that from the patient herself I could gain nothing save that she was growing weaker and weaker every day and hour. As for consumption, not one of the marked symptoms was present. Her lungs were sound and intact. I spent an hour with her and engaged her in constant conversation, and I found that she had no hope of living. She was as one who had made up her mind to droop and die. As I arose, at the end of the hour, she said to me, with a faint smile:

'What do you think, doctor?'

Her smile startled me. It seemed to say:

'I trust you are not going to dispute me—you will not mock me by trying to help me.'

I answered her that I was not prepared to give an opinion. I wished, however, that she would allow me to remove the medicines which other physicians had ordered, as I was satisfied that they were doing her no good.

She thanked me with gushing gratitude. But—would I leave any medicine?

'For the present,' I told her, only a little wine. Had she any objections to that?'

She had none at all.

In the hall I met her father. To his anxious inquires I could only answer that I would call again on the morrow. I told him his daughter had no organic disease—I was sure of it. This assurance gave him hope.

On the following day I saw Cordelia Gregory again, and spent another hour by her side.

So, for a week, I visited her daily. I should have been less than human had I not, in that time, learned to love the sweet, gentle-natured girl. Had my heart been already another's, I should at least have given her a sister's place; but my heart had been all mine own until she possessed it. And in a week's time she had come to welcome me with a brighter kindling of the azure eyes, and a warmer flush of the fading cheeks. And yet during all this time I had been utterly unable to analyse her disease. She was failing just as the running brooklet fails when its fountain is drying up.

On my seventh visit, as I sat by her side, with her hand in mine, I drew her nearer to my bosom, and eagerly cried:

'Cordelia, oh, for my sake, live!—live!'

She answered:

'I have not cared to until now; but it is too late! too late! I am dying—dying—dying!'

She wept upon my bosom.

At that moment I knew that Cordelia Gregory was the victim of some strange hallucination. Something was wearing her life away through her imagination. She had made up her mind to die, and nature was gradually but surely succumbing to the mental force. I dared not then question her. When I next joined her father I asked him if his daughter had any female friend whom she particularly trusted as a confidante.

There was one—a Mary Lakin—who had recently removed to a distant part of the country. She and Cordelia had been like sisters until within two months, when the removal of Mary had separated them.

'We must send for Mary Lakin,' I said, 'and I must see her before she [illegible].'

Mr. Gregory was ready to do anything. Mary Lakin was sent for, and she came—a bright-faced, true-hearted girl—just such a one as I should have supposed would win the confidence and love of Cordelia. I sat down with her and gave her to understand what I wanted. She started when I told her what I thought [illegible] with her friend, and after a little [illegible] she told [illegible] [illegible]

'Doctor,' she said, [illegible]

She [illegible] a year before a band of gipsies had been encamped in the outskirts of the town, and of their number there was an old Sibyl—a dark-eyed, weird-faced woman, whose [illegible] was [illegible] and mysterious—a woman who told fortunes, and concerning whom wonderful stories were related.

'One day,' went on Mary, 'a party of us visited the gipsy camp, and the sibyl intercepted us. I allowed her to tell my fortune, and others of our party did the same. She not only prognosticated for the fortune, but she told things of the past with marvelous accuracy. At length she approached Cordelia, but the girl would not submit. The sibyl persisted, and Cordelia resolutely refused, at the same time declaring that the calling was an impious one. At length the bedlam, in a spiteful way, drew forth from her bosom a bit of reed, like a piece of dried elder stalk, and having split it she took therefrom a pellet of paper, which she gave to Cordelia, bidding her to take it home with her, and not to look at it save in the privacy of her own chamber. Then the woman hobbled off, and our attention was immediately attracted by other matters.

'Several times after that I asked Cordelia what she found in the paper the sibyl had given her; but she never gave me a direct answer, though she would have had me believe that the thing amounted to nothing at all. I remember that the last time I spoke to her of the gipsy's pellet, she started as though the subject gave her pain, and of course I did not recur to it again.'

'Go to Cordelia,' I said, 'and find out what was in that paper. Do not use my name.—Let her not know that you have seen me. Your revelation gives me the light of a new hope. Go—and make no failure.'

On the following day I met Mary Lakin in Mr. Gregory's parlor. She had found the paper.

'I have acted both trator and thief,' she said as she put out her hand. 'First, I won Cordelia's confidence by a pledge of secrecy; and next, I stole this paper from a secret compartment of her writing-desk.'

'This,' said I, is the paper which the gipsy give her.'

'The very same.'

Mary gave it to me, and I took it in my fingers and open it. It was a triangular bit of letter paper, much worn and soiled, and it bore characters written with vermilion ink. The writing was cramped but plain and distinct, and this is what was written:

'Maiden, now so bright and fair,
Of the future take no care.
Within the twelvemonth next to come
Thine earthly pilgrimage is done.
Bear in mind the [illegible] date,
No power of earth can change thy fate!
'Sixth month—Fifth day—1848.'

I read the strange missive, and then re-read it, then looked at Mary Lakin.

'I remembr it all, very well, she said. It was on the fifth day of June, one year ago, that we were at the gipsy camp.'

'And this is the paper which the sibyl gave to Cordelia?'

'Yes.'

'And Cordelia believes it true?'

'Yes. She has told me that she shall die before the day therein set down is passed.'

I saw it all now. The poor girl had hidden that fatal augury away, and had allowed it to occupy her mind until it had gained actual ascendancy. She had brooded over it in fear and trembling, and, all unconsciously, her finely strung and sensitive nature had fallen a prey to the terrible influence.

'To-day,' said I, 'is the 29th of May. If left to herself Cordelia will die before the fifth day of June, a passive victim under the fatal shadow of that augury. We must get her over that fifth day alive. If we can do that, she saved.'

'How can we do it?' asked Mary.

'Will you help me?'

'To the very last possibility of my power,' was her heartfelt reply.

'Then,' said I, 'you shall be her nurse. Let her know nothing of our meeting; and, above all, hint not that I know of this sibyl's augury.'

This twenty-ninth day of May was Tuesday, and the fifth of June would come in just one week—the very next Tuesday.

On Wednesday I visited my patient and she introduced to me her dear friend Mary Lakin, and we acted our parts so well that she suspected not that Mary would remain with her. Of course I was glad. I had prepared with great care a sleeping potion as powerful as I dared to administer, and I had furthermore taken Mr. Gregory into my confidence, and also nurse, a family relative.

'To-night,' said I, in my final charge to Mary, 'do you keep Cordelia awake as much as possible, and before daybreak give her the sleeping mixture. Watch her narrowly, and let no noise be made in the house.'

As I had directed, Mary Lakin suffered no sleep to visit the patient's eyes until well on towards Thursday morning, when, at three o'clock, she administered the opiate in a bit of spiced wine. In a short time Cordelia fell asleep, and the little mantel clock upon the broke the room was thoroughly darkened, and the hush of midnight reigned. She slept until five o'clock that Thursday afternoon, and as she gave signs of wakening the clock was set going. Her nurse sat just as she had sat fourteen hours before.

'Have you been asleep, Cordelia?'

The patient sat up and looked around.

'Is this you, Mary?'

'Yes.'

'What time is it?'

'Why—are you wondering? You have just takin your wine. Do you want more?'

Cordelia looked at the clock. The rays of the nurse lamp fell upon its face, and she saw that it was past three.

'I thought I had slept,' she said.

Mary laughed, and told her she had no time to sleep.

Presently the patient asked for, drink, and another opiate was administered.

* * *

In this way we brought her over to Friday morning, and she had lost a day. It was the morning of the first day of June, and she thought it was Tuesday, the last day of May.

I was sure she could safely bear a repetition, anxious to be as far on the safe side as possible. During this Friday, which she thought to be Thursday, I administered invigorating diet and cordials, and during this same Friday night Mary Lakin continued to keep her charge awake as before. At half past three on Saturday morning the opiate was administered in a drouth for which the patient had called of her own accord, and a sound sleep was the result. The clock was stopped, and all in the house put upon orders of silence.

The sleep lasted until past two o'clock of Saturday afternoon, at which time Cordelia awoke, finding Mary by her side with the goblet in her hand. The nurse-lamp was burning lowly, its rays falling upon the dail of the clock, which was ticking away at the hour of four.

As before, Mary adroitly led her charge to believe that since taking her draught she had only dropped off into a momentary doze, and that it was now four o'clock in the morning. Cordelia asked for more drink, and thus an opportunity was offered for giving the last opiate, which I had prepared with the utmost care and precision.

Cordelia slept again, and awoke not until the dawning of the Sabbath morning. She had lost another day, and thought full sure that the morning beams were for the ushering in of Friday. Mr. Gregory had made an arrangement with the sextons of the two village churches that the Sabbath bells should not be rung, so the day passed, and the patient dreamed not how the time had slipped away. She was living through Sunday, the third day of June, and believed it to be only Friday, the first day of June.

Wednesday morning came—the sixth day of June—bright, calm and beautiful. By my directions Mary had administered a generous stimulant, and our patient was feeling the thrill of a new energy. It was near the middle of the forenoon, and Mr. Gregory and Mary Lakin and myself were in the cheerful chamber to which the golden glories of that June sun had been admitted.

'My darling,' said Mr. Gregory, with a bright smile upon his kindly face, 'I want you to gain strength and get well before your birthday, because Doctor Bunton and myself have planned a grand festival for that occasion.'

'Ah!' replied Cordelia, with a shake of the head, 'that day is too far away for me to reach it.'

'Only to-morrow,' said her father.

'You mistake, my dear father. My birthday is the seventh of June.'

'Exactly, my dear one.'

'To-day,' said Cordelia, 'is only the fourth.'

'Now, my child, don't you make a mistake. To-day is the sixth.'

'This is Monday?'

'No; this is Wednesday.'

She looked bewildered; and after gazing for a time into her father's face, she turned to me. It had been left for me to assure her [illegible] and hold it there [illegible] own.

She rested upon my bosom on that blessed June day of the olden time, and this same bosom is her resting place to-day, and my strong arms still encircle her and hold her close as I kiss her and gaze into her face, and meet the sweet and loving smile of one of the truest and noblest companions that ever made man's pathway bright and blissful.

[illegible] party movement, recently started in Tennessee.

It is announced that the Democratic Executive Committee at Washington is preparing a list of Radical defalcations and swindles, which will speedily be published. It will be made from official records, and will show a worse condition of affairs at Washington than has yet been suspected.

It is a noteworthy fact that every German nominated by the Republicans in Hamilton county, Ohio, was defeated at the election, notwithstanding the eloquent Republican profession of sympathy for the Germans recently so lavishly bestowed. Every German nominated by the Democrats in Hamilton county was elected.

Henry Ward Beecher is reported to have said, in the course of recent remarks upon the New York municipal corruptions, that 'No political capital can be made out of these disclosures, as they were simply an evidence of the financial dishonesty of the times, which is as manifest in Washington as in New York.' The remark is undoubtedly true, but won't Henry Ward 'catch it' from the Radical press for making the admission?

The Washington Republican says: 'Ten years ago precisely William M. Tweed was a bankrupt. To-day, he boasts that he is worth twenty millions of dollars. In other words, he has made two millions of dollars per annum without a cent of capital.' Ten years ago precisely Ulysses S. Grant was a bankrupt. To-day, he can boast that he is worth a million of dollars. In other words, he has made a hundred thousand dollars per annum without a cent of capital. Down with Tweed—Bully for Grant.

AFTER THE FIRE.

WHAT THE CHICAGO PAPERS SAY.

[From the Journal of the 13th.]

Never on the face of the earth has there been so extended and ghastly a scene of ruin and desolation as that now presented throughout the destroyed South and North Divisions of Chicago. The ruins of Pompeii, Herculaneum, Rome or Moscow did not present a more awful spectacle. Hundreds of streets—and area of 2,500 acres—are covered by mere heaps of stones and brick, with here-and-there a standing wall.

Various estimates have been made of the total loss by the great fire, ranging all the way from $200,000,000 to $350,000,000. Probably the former figures will cover all the losses. About 20,000 buildings were burned, about one-fourth of which were of stone or brick, and some of them the finest business edifices in the United States. It is now believed that the actul loss of life will exceed 300. Over 100 dead bodies have already been found.

Water is running in the pipes in the basement of most of the dwellings on the South Side and in the West Division. It is pumped in the pipes by the Water Works, it is thought practicable to have it in running order in a week or ten days.

The city and the surrounding country are filled with mischievious and exciting rumors of outrage and lawlessness. The rumors, in almost every instance, are false and unfounded. The municipal and military authorities are united in their assurances that the degree of order and the freedom from crime and lawlessness are as remarkable as gratifying, under the peculiar circumstances. And they further assure us that the reports of attempted incendiarism, shootings, hangings, etc., are, on careful investigation, found to be utterly and wickedly false. No case of actual attempt at incendiarism, since the fire, or of shooting or hanging, has yet occurred to the knowledge of the authorities, who feel encouraged by the general disposition of the community to preserve order and co-operate for the relief of the suffering and the preservation of order.

The Navigator, a new vessel belonging to Captain Goodrich, which was lying off Goodrich's docks, and tried to run out, stuck just beyond and behind [illegible] stove manufactory, on the north side of the river, and sunk there, her bottom now being just visible. Eight or nine schooners and brigs were caught near the mouth of the river, and burned to the water's edge. [illegible] Rush street bridge east, on the north banks the coal heaps are in a blaze. Rathborne's place and all immediately east of that are safe. Rush street bridge itself is a hopeless and utter wreck, as is also that at State street.

The loss of the Historical Building is irreparable. The library embraced 17,000 volumes, 175,000 pamphlets, and complete sets of files of the Chicago newspapers. This collection embraced a complete record of the history of Chicago from the earliest days to the present.

The Tribune says:

There is considerable debris in many of the streets, but the work of cleaning has already begun. The sidewalks, wood and stone, are gone, the large limestone blocks splitting and caving in.

It is worthy of notice that scarcely a street has a yard of wooden sidewalk remaining, and those who witnessed the conflagration known full well the fatal certainty with which they conducted the fire from block to block, even across vacant blocks. They were as perfect conductors of fire as steel is of lightning. In many streets the Nicolson pavement was badly burned, and it was scorched more or less everywhere.

The water works stood the fiery test well. The tower is intact. The walls of the immense engine house are still perfect, the roof only being destroyed. It was strange how it took fire. The flames had only reached Ohio st. when suddenly and in an instant, the roof was blazing high, and the men besides running for their lives. The buildings intervening were untorched, and it seemed as if an invisible tongue of flame shot across and struck the roof with the rapidity and fatality of lightning. The assistant engineer had barely time to stop the engine, and shout to the men to open the safety valves and save themselves. This occurred at 7:30 on Monday morning, up to which time there was a full head of water on, with only one engine running.

Why Gold Goes Up.

The quotations for gold in Wall street have been steadily going up for some weeks past, and the unexpected sale of $6,000,000 or the commodity on Thursday by the Treasury Department has had but an inappreciable effect in depressing them. The phenomenon is due to severall causes. In the first place, a syndicate of speculators are operating for a rise. Secondly, as shown by the advance of the rate of interest by the Bank of England, the stagnation of the European money market which prevailed during the summer has come to an end, and the millions which were temporarily sent over here and loaned at two and three per cent. per annum have been called home. Thirdly, our imports are large, and that demands coin for duties.

Secretary Boutwell is blamed by many people for not doing this, that and the other thing to keep gold down. In our opinion he does too much for that purpose already. If he would attend to his own business strictly, and not try to help either the bulls or the bears in Wall street, the mercantile, community would be much better off than they now are. They can understand and provide against the workings of the laws of trade; but the caprices of a man clothed with the immense powers of the Secretary of the Treasury are too much for them. The market is kept in a state of uncertainty which is a great deal worse than either a high or low price of gold.—N. Y. Sun.

Roast Pig Seventeen Hundred Years Old.—One house in Pompeii had evidently been in a state of repair when the volcano storm buried it. Painters and decorators and cleaners were masters of the situation. The household gods were all in disorder, and the family if not out of town, must have been undergoing that condition of misery which spring cleanings and other like infections inevitably entail. Paintpots and brushes, and workmen's tools were scattered about. Tell-tail spots of whitewash starred wall and floor. Such domestic implements as pots and kettles had been bundled up in a corner, and the cook was nowhere. Dinner, however, had not been forgotten. A solitary pot stood simmering (if it ever did simmer) on the stove; and (start not, for it is true,) there was a bronze dish in waiting before the oven, and on the dish a suckling pig all rea dy to be baked. But the oven was already engaged with its full completion of bread. So the suckling pig had to wait. And it never entered the oven, an the loaves were never taken out till after a sojourn of 1,700 years! They had been cooking ever since November 23, A. D. 79. M. Friorelli has them now in his museum at Pompeii, twenty-one of them rather hard, of course, and black, but perfectly preserved.—Leisure Hours.

Texas, the Great Cattle Ground.

Texas is truly the cattle hive of North America. While New York, with her 4,000,000, and her settlements two and a half centuries old, has 748,000 oxen and stock cattle; while Pennsylvania, with more than 3,000,000 people, has 721,000 cattle; while Ohio, with 3,000,000 people, has 749,000 cattle; while Illinois, with 2,800,000 people has 867,000 cattle; and while Iowa, with her 1,200,000 people has 686,000 catle—Texas, and forty years of age, and with her 500,000 people, had 2,000,000 of oxen and other cattle, exclusive of cows, in 1867, as shown by the returns of the County Assessors. In 1870, allowing for the difference between the actual number of cattle owned and the number returned for taxation, there must be fully 3,000,000 head of beeves and stock cattle. This is exclusive of cows, which, at the same time, are reported at 600,000 head. In 1871 they must number 800,000, making a grand total of three million eight hundred thousand head of cattle in Texas. One-fourth of these beeves, one-forth are cows, and the other two-fourths are yearlings and two-year-olds.

Alderney Cows for Butter.

Among a large class of farmers the current expenses of the household are paid from the proceeds of a poultry yard and of a small butter dairy, which are under the management of the farmer's wife. For her benefit then, would it not be well to urge over and over again the importance of keeping the best breeds of poultry and the best breeds of cattle for their milk and butter producing qualities?

We find that very many farmers, in fact they make up the majority in Ohio and in Indiana, who have cattle that are inferior in size and neither good for meat or milk. Their farms are too small to warrant them in indulging in "short horns," so they are content with scrubs of the vilest kind, and their wives are too often expected to buy the family groceries and clothing with their chickens and eggs and with butter made from these poor excuses of cows.

To all these the writer of this would recommend a breed now becoming very popular in the Eastern States, but rarely seen in Ohio, viz: the Alderny. True they are small, but the farmer who can sell but one or two calves or steers each season cannot afford to sacrifice milk to size. He keeps three or four cows chiefly for their milk and butter, not to make money for the said of stock. The Alderney is the finests breed for butter making in the world, their milk being almost as rich as ordinary cream. They are easily kepte and very docile, and even the males of the breed are not breachy. In order to introduce this breed among Ohio farmers, let half a dozen join and buy a thorough bred Alderney bull, and by judicious crossing with good grade cows they may soon have the best of milkers and double the quantity of butter be obtained from the same labor expended on their scrub stock.—*Cor. FOUTZ'S

CELEBRATED

Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—We take this method of informing the public and our patrons that other clothing houses are painting the fronts of their stores red in order to dupe and deceive the public.

They are aware that the genuine Red Front Clothing House, at No. 5 Keystone Block, have succeeded in establishing by their fair and honorable dealing and low prices the largest trade in the city of Fort Wayne.

Those who are counterfeiting our signs and advertisements do so only to deceive the public. All persons should be on their guard and look well for the right number, which will be found only at No. 5 Keystone Bloc. It being in the finest and most public block in the city, where there are seven large stores all built alike it will be no trouble to find it.

The public will always find it very much to their interest to call at the popular and established Red Front Clothing Hall; at No. 5 Keystone Block.

Look out for the largest stock of clothing ever brought to one house in Fort Wayne this fall. Most goods and lowest prices.

WANTED.—At T. B. Totten's, nice fresh Yellow [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] barrels.

Go to Davis' Hardware Store for a good apple-parer.

READ the communication of President Collins in this issue.

CIDER and apples are receiving much attention just now.

WHY is it that our merchants have to go so often after [illegible] that is coming to them.

FOR School Books and Stationery go to the Pioneer Drug Store. They have a splendid stock.

JUST received at F. E. Davenport & Co's., Pioneer Drug Store, a splendid stock of Wall and Window Paper.

A man by the name of F. Shupp, was killed at Fort Wayne, last Friday, by being run over by the cars.

THE great sea monster said to be captured [illegible], some three years ago, was on exhibition here last Tuesday.

THE Muncie [illegible] has an original story entitled, "[illegible] Wild Bill," of the wild willows, no doubt, written by William Willis of Williamsport—[illegible]

A GRAND Musical Concert will be given in this place, next Tuesday week, by the best home talent, together with several fine singers and musicians from Fort Wayne.

THE poetical contribution from Newville, is hardly of a proper character for publication. Its personalities may cause hard feelings, while they cannot accomplish any good.

NEW ARRANGEMENT.— Hereafter any heavy packages purchased at the store of T. B. Totten, will be delivered at any residence in the corporation free of charge. Mind that when you want groceries.

ALL RIGHT.—The Phenix Insurance Co., of Brooklyn, looses about $300,000 in the Chicago fire, but the President of the company is able and ready to pay all loses at sight. Persons wanting insurance should make a note of this.

CLOCKS.—Our enterprising jeweller, J. Abright, Esq., has just recived a large [illegible], of every description, which [illegible] figures. Those wanting a good time piece should give him a call.

A [illegible] husband in Ohio advertises thusly: "My wife Maria has strayed or been stolden. Whoever returns her will get his head broke. As to trusting her, any body can do so if they see fit, for as I never pay my own debts, it's not likely as I'll pay hern."

THE Hartford City Democrat, the office of which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been revived and comes to us in a handsome dress of type, and in an enlarged form. Under the able control of C. F. Jackson, Esq., it will do good service [illegible] in Blackford County.

THE Chicago fire is felt directly in every community. Auburn contributes her share to the loss. The Woolen Mills had about a thousand dollars worth of their [illegible] sale in that city which were destroyed. Joe Abright also loses a considerable amount, in the way of money and jewelry sent there to be manufactured.

A FELLOW by the name of Lauferty, was arrested and put in jail because he had taken on too much "benzine." Now, some may be led to think that this was our popular dry goods merchant of the same name, but we hasten to assure them that it was not. A glance at his feet convinced us of this fact.

THE Fort Wayne Sentinel, abundantly accounts for our defeat in Ohio. It says that the Democrats were so busy cooking provisions for the Chicago sufferers that they had not the hearts nor the time to stop even a moment to vote. The Republicans being more stony hearted tossed in their votes, hence the result. Just like 'em.

THANKS.—Our enterprising friend, Danl. Lints, Esq., made us a handsome present last Monday, of several fine varities of apples and potatoes. We greatly appreciate these little acts of kindness and good will, and they do much to smooth the rough places that generally beset the printer.—We tender our thanks.

POMEROY'S DEMOCRAT.—M. M. ("Brick") Pomeroy, editor and proprietor—has the largest circulation, with the greatest and most interesting variety of reading matter of any political paper in the world. Subscription price $2.50. Club rates $2.00 Sample copies sent free. Address C. P. Sykes, publisher, post-office box 5217, N. York.

ANOTHER.—That stanch old vetran, Jas. McCrum, Esq., not only called and paid his subscription for a year, but brought a basket of nice large rambo apples, for our special enjoyment. Well, we couldn't expect much better of him as he is always committing these acts of courtesy, until he's got everybody happy around him, and he is now extending his sphere of usefullness.

ON THEIR MUSCLE.—Quite a number of railroad hands have thronged our streets, in consequence of the near completion of the railroad, and, the usual restlessness characteristic of these workmen has been indulged in. "Benzine" has been resorted to, to kill time and themselves, and we are sorry to say that they have been furnished with it abundantly, to judge from the number of fights and drunken sprawls on the street. Our citizens are much exercised about fire, yet they permit these reckless creatures to become crazed with liquor, and enhance the danger of fire thereby, for they will smoke and always have matches about them. Several of our citizens have found them in their barns and stables in this condition. However, they will not remain long, it is hoped, as they are now awaiting pay day in order to get the wherewith to leave.

NOT YET.—[illegible] towards repairing [illegible] or making new ones. And in consequence we hear a great many complaints of the [illegible] inactivity of the Town Board. What's the matter, gentlemen? The season when fires do mostly rage is upon us, and no water. Who is to blame? Let us have water.

No further evidence is needed of the awful impression made upon the community at large by the Chicago fire than that [illegible] against the sudden death [illegible] incendiaries. Allen Pinkerton, the head of Pinkerton's Police, has taken the grave responsibility of ordering his Lieutenants to kill every one found stealing, and in several instances it has been done, and everybody seems to approve of the order.

THE citizens of Decatur, Ind., are considerably excited over the apprehension that Mr. A. J. Hill, editor of the Eagle, wife and two children, may have perished in the flames at Chicago. Mr. Hill's brother-in-law, who also resides at Decatur, had an appointment to meet Mr. Hill and family at the Sherman House, on last Monday, on his return from a tour west. The brother-in-law proceeded to Chicago, and remained there several days, but could learn nothing in regard to Mr. Hill. The circumstances are indeed full of alarm.

IN looking over the ruins of Chicago, near the Union depot, the singular sight presents itself of a two-story frame building unharmed, not even giving forth the semblance of being scorched. Twenty feet on the north of it, a large brick block, burned to the ground, and on all other sides the flames swept everything before them. It seems from the position of the building that escape was impossible, and yet stands that two-story house, the only inhabited tenement within half a mile.

THE LOCAL JOURNAL.—The local paper is an absolute necessity to the country and community where it is published. All the city papers cannot supply the place of the home paper. That should be the first love of every man and woman, for with the paper is the locality identified. The paper gives the county and town where it is printed much of their importance in the world, and give in detail the local news, which cannot be gained by any other source.

Important R. R. Meeting.

All the subscribers to the capital stock of the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois Railroad Co., whether absolute or conditional residing in Auburn and vicinity, are earnestly requested to meet at the Court House Saturday, Oct. 21st, at one and a half o'clock P. M., promptly, to make some arrangement for the extension of the road east, and other important business. President Collins will be present.

GEO. ESSLEY, W. H. DILLS,
I. LAUFERTY, JNO. L. DAVIS,
S. W. SPROTT, J. H. FORD,
C. S. HARE, THOS. D. GROSS,
S. C. SWINEFORD.

THE able and talented editor of the Auburn COURIER, Col. T. Corwin Mays, passed through Fort Wayne, this morning, en route for his beautiful country villa at Auburn, Ind., after a short sojourn at Plymouth, attending the editorial convention of the tenth and eleventh districts.—His lecture before that body will appear next week. It is decidedly ahead of that delivered by T. Stanfield Taylor, Esq., of the Journal, at Muncie. It is about the "Men who don't Advertise," and he lights into them like a thousand of brick.

THE above is from the gifted pen of Gen. R. D. Dunn, of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, whose personal items are always like a picture—flattering. He is the most popular man in Fort Wayne as well as the most modest. Call for the cigars, General, and sally one.

Ruined Chicago.

We visited the scene of desolation and ruin at Chicago, last Sabbath, expecting to find on our arrival the various newspaper accounts greatly exaggerated. But, for once, they must be accredited with being truthful, or approximating as near as possible to that point, for it is impossible to draw a pen-picture of the actual scene of dreariness and ruin now presented.—Never before in the history of the world has a calamity overtaken the property and growth of a city, and, it will doubtless be referred to for years to come, as the grandest of all gloomy pictures on the walls of memory. We will not attempt to describe the vastness of the destruction now spread out in the most beautiful portion of that recently prosperous city, and nothing but an actual view can ever give you a basis on which to form a correct estimate. If you can afford it, go and see it by all means for it will amply repay you for the trouble.

NEW BUILDINGS.—Though the season is already far advanced, yet there seems to be no cessation in making improvements throughout the place. Several new buildings have been commenced within ten days past, and others that did not expect to be ready for occupation this fall, are almost finished. This is due to the splendid weather which has favored these enterprises, since their inception. Though unusual dry and dusty, yet it has not been without good results.

Michael Long has his new frame residence on Fourth street, well under way, and will occupy it yet this winter.

A. J. Little will finish a part of his fine building, on North Main street, for occupation this winter.

G. C. Ralston will be ready to roof his new brick on Seventh street, this week.

Henry Shell is laying the foundation for a frame house, on Jackson street, and if the weather is favorable will use it this winter.

W. H. Dills, has made valuable improvements to his fine property on South Main street, within the last two weeks.

Albert Robbins is erecting a nice story and a half frame, on Fourth staeet, which will be finished by winter.

J. W. Case is making rapid progress with his brick business house, and will soon be ready for the roof. This will be three stories high, and make the largest business room in the place.

You can buy, at the popular Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block Ft Wayne, Ind., good all wool casimere suits for ten dollars, better ones $15, and the best for $18. Call and see them.

TREASURER'S OFFICE, Auburn. Oct. 14, '71.

Arrival of the First Train on the Detroit, Eel River & Ill., R. R.

At last the cars have arrived from the west. Last Tuesday evening the construction train passed over the bridge near the junction, and came up to the depot.—As soon as the track is put in condition trains will be placed thereon. Attention will now be directed eastward, and great hopes are entertained that there will be no delay in completing the road in this direction. All are anxious for the attainment of this object, and every effort should be put forth to this end. The local subscription, already pledged will be lost if the road is not completed to Butler by the first of January. The Board of Directors meet on the 26th, inst., and it is to be hoped that they will feel sufficiently encouraged over the prospect to build this much of the road in the specified time. We are now joined by iron bands with Columbia City, and we trust that we can soon say the same of Butler.

Sedan Brevities.

PERSONAL.—Rev. A Leathes, the Luthern Pastor, has returned from synod which convened at Constantine, Mich., and will remain upon this Pastoral charge another year. Bro. Leathers is welcomed back by many friends.

AMONG the number from our place, who visited afflicted Chicago, are Messrs. Hains Bros., J. M. Uris and Hiram Jones.

NEW WAGON SHOP.—R. A. Grate, the old and reliable wagon-maker, has removed his former occupation in the old stand. We need not say anything in reference to Mr. G's. workmanship, he has been long enough in Sedan to gain a wide "reputation."

ALAS!—What's become of our egg merchant, who can tell? "He left here on an eastward-bound train. Perhaps he has gone to New York." "What for?" To see about those "canned eggs." Selah.

G. H. C.

NOT FIRE BUT FAST HORSES.—The Press of last week says:

"A recent number of the COURIER mentions that its editor has been riding behind one the fastest horses in the county, which it says is owned by Mr. Christopher Cool. Waterloo horsemen request us to call this statement in question, and challenge a test of speed. For further particulars call on Gen. Blair."

If we claim the fastest horse it is for others who dispute it to come here and test the question. It has been asserted that Mr. Cool possesses the fastest trotting horse in the county and the challange, so to speak, has gone forth. So, come down and take away the laurel if you can. Mr. Cool has handed us the following for publication which shows some nerve, as J. N would say:

EDITOR COURIER.—I see an item in the Press, of last week, regarding fast horses, and refering me to Gen. Blair for particulars. My colt works in the harness every day, but if the General will come down seeing he is one of the curious and unbelieving, I will take him (the colt, of course) out of the harness long enough to convince him, (the General, of course) so that he can go back and say to the people of Waterloo, thusly Behold what mine eyes have seen, I must believe. Time.

C. COOL.

WE have succeeded, after considerable exertion, in giving a map of Chicago in this issue.

Application for License.

NOTICE is hereby given to the citizens of Wilmington township, in DeKalb County, Indiana that I will at the December session 1871, of the Board of Commissioners of said county, apply for license to retail intoxicating liquors in a less quantity than a quart at a time, and the privilege of having the same drank on the following premises to-wit: In the building situated on the North two thirds of Lot number one [1] in Morris' addition to the town of Butler, in said county.

N. F. GENGNAGLE, Appl't.

To the Subscribers of Stock of the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois R. R.

By the terms of our contract with D. L. Quirk & Co., for the construction of our road, we bound ourselves to pay them $40,000 when the iron was laid to Springfield, and a like amount when laid to Manchester.

The iron is laid to Springfield now, and will be to Manchester in a few days. We must make these payments. The [illegible] negotiating with the contractors [illegible] them that you would make payment promptly, to which they reply: "We are not acquainted with your subscribers, but we are with the directors of your company: you know your subscribers. We will have to pay out $150,000 or $200,000 before you contract to pay us anything, and we must know that we will be paid promptly, before we can contract with you. We will require your Directors to personally guarantee these payments.'

Then, to secure the construction of your road, it became an absolute necessity that such guarantee be given. It was given by your Directors, and the construction of your road secured beyond the possibility of a doubt.

Now we ask you, in view of these facts, and the fact that we have contractors who are, in every way, honorable and responsible; who advanced, of their own means, $60,000, to pay for labor done and materials furnished by Union Construction Company, and who have since expended over $250,000 of their own means; and who are making a good road at once, and doing it more speedily than ever a road was built in this part of Indiana, to come to the rescue. Help us to confirm to them the assurances we gave.

You are many, and it is quite a task to visit you all. Any who can call at the office of Collins & Sickafoose, at Columbia City, on Dr. Edwards, at Springfield, or on Thos. J. Cuppy, anywhere, and make payment, will confer a great favor. And please call at once.

As soon as the iron is laid to Liberty Mills, and excursion will be given to that place, and a ride given to all who are present who do not go on the train. A like excursion will be given when iron is laid to Manchester, Roann, Cherubusco, and Auburn. We ask all of you who can to be present at the several places, and make payment. Those who cannot attend we ask to call upon the Director at each point and make payment.

When the road is completed from Roann to Auburn, Mr. D. L. Quirk, representing the contractors, promises a free ride from Roann to Detroit to all who have paid up their subscription promptly, or who gave us the right of way. Go up one day and back the next, and he assures us the Detroit folks will give us Hoosiers a grand reception.

Almost all the business men along the line have aided this enterprise by their subscriptions; some, who are equally interested, have not. Our subscription must be increased. All who have not can now subscribe, and we will be thankful for it We think no man now doing business along the line, or intending to do so, can afford not to subscribe.

Since the publication of the foregoing circular the iron has been laid from Auburn to Manchester.

No portion of the subscriptions, in De Kalb County has been paid, elsewhere, along the line, the subscriptions have been paid promptly.

I will be in Auburn, Saturday the 21st inst., and at Butler, Monday 23d. inst., to receive payment on subscription.

All the installments of the capitol stock are past due. We hope every one will call and pay promptly.

JAMES S. COLLINS, Pres.

Oct. 13th, 1871.

INSURANCE.—Those desiring insurance from loss by fire, can now be accommodated. We have been appointed agent for the Phoenix of New York, a company representing a capital of $1,800,000. Call at the COURIER office.

DEATHS.

[illegible]—On Tuesday last, at half past two o'clock P. M., [illegible], wife of [illegible], aged [illegible] years and [illegible] days.

Dust, to its narrow home beneath,
Soul, to its place on high—
They that have seen thy look in death
No more may fear to die.

Lonely are the paths and sad the bowers
Whence thy meek smile is gone;
But, Oh, a brighter home than ours
In heaven is now thine own!

PROLIFIC.—Our genial farmer friend, Danl. Lints, Esq., has left upon our table the production of one grain of wheat taken from his farm, four miles northwest of this place, in Richland township. From one grain twenty-eight stocks were produced, the aggregate yield of which was five hundred and eleven grains. Surely this is greater than the yield spoken of in the Scriptures, where some brought forth an hundred fold. The seed was selected from the celebrated Lancaster wheat, and if the yield would average one fourth the amount it would certainly prove an excellent variety to sow. Mr Lints, seeing an invitation in our paper soliciting items of this kind, came in and gave us these facts for which he has our thanks. Now, there is not a good, reliable farmer in the county but what can furnish something similar to the above, that has come to notice during the year. These items are of interest to the reader and are, therefore, what a local paper should contain. We are ready to give them, when the facts are furnished us, and we cordially invite all to call on us for that purpose.

PLYMOUTH.—We attended the editorial convention held at this place, last Friday, composed of the 10th and 11th districts The attendance was not very large and the session a brief one. We were there long enough, however, to enjoy the hospitalties of the citizens of that place, who vied with each other in extending a hearty welcome. Messrs. VanVaukenburg and McDonald, of the Democrat, and Bender, of the Republican, had made every arrangement for our entertainment and we had a most pleasant visit.

We were pleased to learn of the very liberal support these papers were receiving not only because they are excellent papers, but because the people appreciate the advantages thus secured to them.—Plymouth is improving very fast, and is destined to be one of the finest cities in this part of the State. Some very fine brick business blocks have been erected, together with a fine new Court House, which adds much to the beauty of the place. We visited the Masonic Hall, one of the finest in the State, and found it far superior in many things to any we have ever before seen.

After the evening session we were invited to partake of a magnificiently prepared lunch at the residence of Mr. Milliken, who we believe is now connected with the Republican, of that place. After a few hours spent in social enjoyment to which each member of this excellent family largely contributed, we left for our homes well pleased with our visit. We are under obligations to the Parker House for an excellent dinner, which is daily provided at this popular house. Bro. Mattingly, of that place, is also entitled to many thanks for his courtesy.

We must not forget to mention, in this connection, that affable, curteous and agreeable gentleman, Col. Poe, proprietor of the People's Drug Store, an establishment that stands A No. 1. The Colonel essayed once in the publishing line, and his description of life in this capacity is not only interesting but amusing and doubly so when rendered by the Col. The Colonel regarded it as his particular province to furnish the cigars which he did without stint, for which he put each member under obligations. Many thanks Colonel.

Notice of Administration.

NOTICE is hereby given that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of Court of Common Pleas, of DeKalb County, State of Indiana, Administrator of the estate of David Dixon, late of DeKalb County, deceased. Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

MARKLEY SHRADER & CO

A Western Job.

A certain good natured old Vermont farmer preserved his constant good nature, let what would turn up. One day one of his men came in, bringing the news that the speckled ox was dead.

"Is he?" said the old man.

"Well, he was always a breechy cuss! Take his hide off and take it down to Fletcher's; it will fetch the cash."

An hour or so afterward the man came back with the news that Line back and his mate were both dead.

"Are they?" said the old man.

"Well, I took them of B. to save a bad debt that I never expected to get. It is lucky that it ain't the brindles."

After the lapse of another hour the man came again to tell him that the nigh brindle was dead.

"Is he?" said the old man.

"Well, he was a very old ox. Take off his hide and take it down to Fletcher's; its worth cash, and will bring more than any two of the other."

Hereupon his wife, who was a very pious lady, reprimanded her husband severely, and asked him if he was not aware that the loss was a judgment from heaven upon him for wickedness.

"Is it?" said the old man.—"Well, if they will take the judgment in cattle it is the easiest way a man can pay it."

Balky Horses.

The brain of a horse seems to entertain but one thought at a time; for this reason continued whipping is out of the question, and only confirms his stubborn resolve. But if you can by any means change the direction of his mind, give him a new subject to think of, nine times out of ten you will have no further trouble in starting him. As simple a trick as a little pepper, aloes or the like thrown back on his tongue, will often succeed by turning attention to the taste in his mouth. "The pair of cattle to a log chain around the horse's neck" is an intricate and expensive remedy, and a good many people may not be so lucky as you Fond du Lac man in having a yoke of cattle handy for the occasion.

A simple and cheaper remedy that will result far differently is to take a couple of turns of common wrapping twine, such as grocers use, around the fore leg just below the knee, tight enough for the horse to feel and tie in a bow knot. At the first cluck he will generally go dancing off, and after going a short distance you can get out remove the string to prevent injury to the tendon in your further drive. The first lesson in this simple process was in Lexington; subsequent experience has proven its utility when applied to balky horses. The philosophy of the appliance is something on the same principle as that whereof we once read for preventing hens from scratching up the garden. Put gaffs or spurs on the hens, reversing them—instead of the points up, have them pointing downward. Then when the hen lifts a leg to scratch, as it descends the point of the spur catches in the ground, placing that foot forward; and the stroke with the other leg is attended with like results until the hen walks herself right out of the garden.—Turf, Field and Farm.

Fattening Poor Cattle.

We frequently see a miserable, half-starved bovine without a particle of flesh on his bones but what mucles will hold its frame together, and having a hard unyielding skin covered with dirt and scruff, put up to be fed for the butcher on dry hay, to which a few roots and perhaps some grain it grudgingly added. Such a beast will take months of time and a large consumption of food to bring it up to the point at which the process of laying on fat will commence; or, if highly fed on corn-meal or other rich food, will put on a layer of fat just under the skin, with scarcely any flesh between that and the bones and so be worth but little more after feeding up that it would fetch as a store beast.

Then again there are thousands of beasts put up to feed for the butcher before they have attained an age, at which they can be profitably fed. Such animals though they may be made passable enough to suit the wants of the drover or low class butchers, can only be sold at a low price and obtain but small weights, while, had they been kept on till they had attained their full growth, they might be made to vie with the best and command double or treble the price.

Cattle intended to be winter-fed for the butcher should have reached maturity as regards the development of their muscular and digestive systems. To get the animals in a proper condition to be fed up, they must have the run of such good pasture in the summer and fall before being put up as will bring them into stalls full of flesh well laid on at every valuable point. This done, the process of feeding in order to lay fat on at the right point and in the proper manner becomes both profitable and takes but a moderate length of time. Such an animal, well managed, will bring in much more per pound live weight than one of equal size fed in the ordinary way—Pomeroy Democrat.

Sharp-Shooting.

The following dialogue on "sharp-shooting," took place between a rebel and a Yankee picket:

'I say can you fellows shoot?'

'Wall, I reckon we can, some—Down in Mississippi we can knock a bumble-bee off a thistle bough at three hundred yards.'

'Oh, that ain't nothing to the way we shoot up in Varmount. I b'longed to a military company ther' with a hundred men in it, and we went out to practice every week. The captain draws us up single file, and sets a cider barrel rolling down hill, and each man takes his shot at the bung-hole as it turns up. It is afterwards examined, and if there is a shot that didn't go in the bung-hole the member who missed it is expelled. I belonged to the company ten years, and there ain't been nobody expelled yet.'

Old Starks, an honest German farmer, was great on garden truck, butter, eggs, etc., which he carried regularly to town to sell or barter for family supplies. One day he came in as usual, and the storekeeper, thinking to get a 'saw' on the old man saik:

'Well, Mr. Starks, you have got some more eggs?'

'Ya, I have a few.'

'I paid you a bit for the last,' said the storekeeper, 'but we have had a convention of the storekeepers, and they have resolved to give but only ten cents in the future.'

'Y-a-w. Vell, mine hens they have a meeting,' said Starks, 'and they resolves wot dey won't wear demselves out laying eggs for less as foofteen shents!' And the old man stalked off, leaving the old storekeeper to stand the l u h.

A Louisville dentist who had become nervous by frequent burglaries in his vicinity, was somewhat startled recently, by having a man come daily at the same hour and sit on his doorstep. He finally suggested to the stranger that if it would be all the same to him he would be pleased to have him divide his attentions, and sit on some neighbor's door step awhile.

'But it wouldn't be the same,' shouted the visitor in return, 'nor anything like it. You are a dentist, and I have an infernal aching tooth that I havn't the courage to have pulled. I come here every afternoon trying to make up my mind to have it out and as soon as I come in sight of your house it stops aching, and as long as I sit on your steps, where the confounded thing knows it can get pulled if it gives trouble, I have some rest. Now if you want me to go to another dentist I will.'

'Oh no,' was the reply, 'under those circumstances, stay by all means my dear friend.'

Mark Twain produces one of the most striking cases of meanness on record. He says he knows of an incorporated society which hired a man to blast a rock, and he was punching powder in it with a crowbar when a premature explosion took place, sending the man down out of sight. Both came down all right, and the man went to work promptly. But though he has gone only 15 minutes, the company 'docked him for lost time.'

An exchange says: 'Jay Cooke's father was named Eleutheros. He lost an office once (it was before the days of the printed ballots) because not one in five could spell his name right, and disgusted, as is supposed, with the occurrence, he went to extremes of monosyllabism, and named his boys Pitt and Jay, relaxing a little on the third, whom he called Henry.'

A few miles from the city is a plain board, which bears the following inscription. It is neither applicable nor suggestive, yet slightly poetical:

'Once the red Indian here took his delights,
Fished, fit, and bled;
Now most of the inhabitants are whites
With mary red.'

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken-down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

[illegible] Per Cent.

General Craft, one of our prominent lawyers, was hailed while passing Freeman's jewelry store, by the proprietor with, 'General come in here a moment; we have something for you to solve. If a man brings a watch to be fixed, and it costs me ten cents to do it, and I keep it a week, and charge him $6, then what per cent do I make? We have been figuring and make it 900 per cent., and have only got up to $1. How much do you say it will be at $6?'

'Well,' replied the General, 'I do no wonder at your perplexity, for it is well known, and the celebrated Babbit calculating machine has demonstrated, that at certain points in progressive numbers the law governing them changes. In this case the law would change, and long before it would reach the $6 it would run out of per cent. and into what is known as larceny!—Harper's Magazine.

THE DEAD LETTER.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

And can it be? Ah, yes, I see,
'Tis thirty years and better
Since Mary Morgan sent to me
This musty, musty letter.
A pretty hand (she couldn't spell),
As any man must vote it;
And 'twas as I remember,
A pretty hand that wrote it!

How calmly now I view it all,
As memory backward ranges—
The talks, and walks, that I recall,
And then—the postal changes!
How well I loved her I can guess
(Since cash is Cupid's hostage)—
Just one-and-sixpence—nothing less—
This letter cost in postage!

The love that wrote at such a rate
(By Jove! it was a steep one!)
Five hundred notes (I calculate)
Was certainly a deep one;
And yet it died—of slow decline—
Perhaps suspicion chilled it;
I've quite forgotten if 'twas mine
Or Mary's flirting killed it!

At last a fatal message came:
"My letters—please return them;
And yours—of course you wish the same—
I'll send them back or burn them."
Two precious fools, I must allow,
Whichever was the greater;
I wonder if I'm wiser now,
Some seven lustres later?

And this alone remains! Ah, well!
These words of warm affection,
The faded ink, the pungent smell,
Are food for deep reflection.
They tell of how the heart contrives
To change with fancy's fashion,
And how a drop of musk survives
The strongest human passion!

Married for a Dime.

A correspondent at Rocky Hill Station sends us the following:

A good joke is told on Judge Houchin, of Brownsville. The Judge was seated near the bar door at the hotel of York & Houchin, when a rather pale, slender youth approached the hotel and inquired for Judge Houchin. A gentleman seated near by pointed to the judge, and observed, 'there is the gentleman.' The young man said to him, 'Step this way, Judge.'

The judged stepped to the edge of the porch, when the young man said. 'I have come over here to get married.'

'Well, said the judge, 'I have no objections.'

'Well, I want you to go over to the court house with me; I want the license.

'You must go to the clerk.'

The lad started off in great haste, and in a few minutes returned.

'They say you will marry me.'

'Yes, I do marry people sometimes, but it is customary to get a minister.'

'What do you charge for marrying?

'I never make any charge; I marry the boys and they pay me whatever they see fit to.'

'You will marry me for a dollar, will you:'

'Yes, I always marry the boys and they pay me whatever they think it is worth.'

'Well, then, won't you marry me for a quarter in silver?'

'Oh, yes, the law allows me two dollars but I always marry the boys and they pay me just as I said, just what they think it is worth.'

So the Judge started for the Clerk's office with the pallid youth, and administered the marriage ceremony in these few words: 'By the authority which I hold in my hands, I pronounce you man and wife.'

Somebody called out, 'you are a married man now.'

'Well, Judge, you ought to have done that for nothing; it isn't worth more than a dime no how.'

A tremendous burst of laughter followed, and the judge stood the treat.

A New Rendering on an Old Text.

Spending a winter as invalids at Aiken South Carolina, the Hon. Thurlow Weed and Mr. Thomas C. Acton whiled away one Sabbath afternoon by attending a negro church, and were accompanied by Mr John A Kennedy, who was on a visit of a few days to Mr. Acton. When they entered the primitive temple the preacher, who was a poor African, was grappling with all the fervor of his race with the old, old subject of the fall of man. Sketching that day in the garden with its terrible results he excoriated Mr. Adam in this fashion:

'Now, brederen when the Lord calls Adam to 'count did he stan' up like a man, confess his sin and ask forgiveness? He did'nt do nuffin of de sort, brederen, but he say:

'Lord, de woman dat Dou gubest me gub me for to eat.'

Pausing a moment he repeated:

'De woman dat Dou gubest me gub me for to eat.'

Then again:

'De woman Dou gubest me gub me for to eat.

'Dar, brederen, you see dat mean, skulkin' Adam was a trying to sneak out of it by frowin' all de blame on de Lord himself!'

This new idea of an old question was too much for the distinguished white trash,' who had fortunately taken seats near the door, and they retired into the fields to again indulge in irreverent laughter.

'A man having been brought before a Dutch justice of the peace in Canada on charge of having four wives, the astounded magistrate exclaimed, 'You let dat man go; if he lifs mit four wifes he has punishment enuf. I lifs mit only von, and dat's more'n I can stand.

A Newspaper Story.

Some fellow—a collector for a newspaper and other periodicals—lately threw up his commission, and sent back the unpaid accounts with 'notes' which the spirit happened to lay hold on, and they were presented in a tangible shape to the world. As there are living pictures met with here and elsewhere we make extracts. The collector says:

To the Editor:—Sir—You furnished me as your collector, with a list of one hundred and seventeen owing subscription.—I have called upon one hundred and four of them, and have the honor of paying to you twelve and one half cents, being the amount to which you are entitled. I return you the list numbered and sixteen, and now give the reply to each:

No. 1—Is a minister. He says in the first plat, he never got one-half the numbers, (a lie according to the postmaster) and in the next place your joker's column was too scurrillous. Besides he knows by the tone of your editorials that you drink. He wants nothing more to do with you, and never wants to hear from you again.

No. 2—Is in jail for debt. He has not seen a half a dollar for a year. Says he would pay with the utmost cheerfulness, if he had the money. Had to borrow a suit to put on last Sunday. Admires your paper wonderfully, and hopes you will continue sending it to him. He wishes you to take a bold stand in favor of the abolition of imprisonment for debt, as he thinks it would be a very popular move with a gentleman in his situation. Sends his best respects.

No. 3.—Is a doctor. Says your paper is beneath the notice of a gentleman. Says he would not give a d—— for a cart load. Says that you inserted an article reflecting upon his profession. Only wishes he could catch you here—would make you smell———. Is going to persuade every one that takes your paper to stop it. Cussed the bill, and says you may get it the best way you can.

No. 4—Is an old maid. Says you are always taking a fling at single ladies of an uncertain age. Would'nt pay you if she was roling in wealth, and you hand't enough to buy a crust of bread. Sent all the papers she had back a month ago, and she says now she has sent them and don't owe you anything. She says she is even with you and intends to keep so until the day of Judgment.

No. 5—Is a gambler. Says he was completly cleaned out last week at the races. Couldn't accommodate his grandmother with a half dime if she was starving. Likes your paper tolerably, would like it better if you published more races, and if you occasionally give an account of a cock fight Hopes you won't think hard of him for not paying it now, but has a prospect of having some loose change as he is after a rich young greenhorn who arrived here last week. Will pay your bill out of the pluckings.

No. 6—Is a magistrate. Swore he never owed you cent, and told me I was a rascal for trying to swindle him in such a bare-faced manner. Advised me to make tracks in a little less than no time, or he would get out a warrant for me as a common cheat, and have me sent to prison. Is by odds the meanest man I have seen yet. Never will go near him again.

The collector concludes with, 'accept my resignation, and strike me from your list of agents. I have been called a swindler, rascal, villain, and blood sucker.—These are some of the names they think proper to bestow upon me. I tried fighting awhile, and thrashed some of your patrons like blazes, but occasionally got licked like thunder, myself.'

Young America at the Wheel.

A well know clergyman was crossing Lake Erie some time ago on one of the lake steamers, and seeing a small lad at the wheel, steering the boat, he accosted him as follows:

'My son, you appear to be a small boy to steer so large a boat.'

'Yes, sir,' was the reply, 'but you see I can do it though.'

'Do you think you understand your business, my son?'

'Yes sir, I think I do.'

Can you box the compass?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Let me hear you.'

The boy done it as he was requested, when the minister replied:

'Well, really, you can do it. Can you do it backward?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Let me hear you.'

The boy again did as requested, when the minister remarked:

'I declare, my son, your seem to understand your business.'

The boy took his turn in questioning, beginnig:

'Pray, sir, what might be your business?'

'I'm a minister of the gospel.'

'Do you understand your business?'

'I think I do, my son.'

'Can you say the Lord's prayer?'

'Yes.'

'Say it.'

The clergyman did so, repeating the words in a very fervent manner, as tho' trying to make an impression on the young lad.

'Well really,' said the boy, upon its conclusion, 'you do know it, don't you! Now say it backward.

Oh, I can't do such a thing as that, of course.

'You can't do it, eh? returned the boy. Well, you see I understand my business a great deal better than you do.'

The clergyman thought he said enough, and retired.

HARVEST APPLES.

[From Harper's Weekly]

THE letter said 'come,' and with a sigh of relief I laid it upon the table before me, and looked out into the dusty streets.

I was a working-woman in the city of New York. Whether I trimmed bonnets for Madame La Mode, measured off laces for mademoiselle her daughter, kept books, read proofs, set type, or even wrote editorials for the Starry Host, is a matter of no consequence. Suffice it to say, I was tired. In my dreams I 'babbled of green fields.' I longed for one long summer vacation of freedom and rest. But where should I go? Like Joanna Gayworthy, I found the world 'too full of other people.' I wanted nature, not men and women.

At length I bethought me of a distant cousin, Hiram Gardner by name, who lived in a low, brown farm-house away up among the Green Mountains; and forth with I wrote to him, asking if he would receive me as a boarder for three months. This letter was the answer:

'Come right along, Cousin Winifred,' he wrote, 'and stay as long as you can make yourself contented. Not as a boarder, though. Thank God, I am not so poor as to feel obliged to take money from my own kith and kin for a few weeks' board and lodging. My wife and Hope will be glad to see you.'

So, in a flurry of delight, packed my trunk, telegraphed to Cousin Hiram, and in two days' time stood on the platform of the depot at Highland watching the receding train as it thundered down the valley.

As for Hope—little Hope Gardner—what shall I tell you about her? I had my own ideas about 'country girls;' I thought of sunburn and freckles, coarse hands and ungainly feet in that connection. But one glance at Hope as she stood in the flickering shadows of the great elm that overhung the low, wide, roomy house overthrew all my preconceived opinions. Eyes that were of the very tint of the violets I loved—hair that, guiltless of crimping-pins, fell in great golden waves below her waist, and there coiled itself up in a profusion of tiny curls; brow so fair that you saw the net-work of blue veins at the temples; cheeks softly tinted with a wild-rose bloom; face of a delicate oval, redeemed from gentle insipidity by the sweet firmness of the well-cut lips, and by eyebrows and lashes many shades darker than the hair; slight girlish figure, clad in a simple, graceful costume that would have passed unchallenged any where. Such was the picture that greeted my eyes as Cousin Hiram's pair of handsome grays swept round the corner, and Hope came forward to meet me.

Before many weeks had passed I began to discover the trail of the serpent in my newly found Eden. I had thought my cousin Hiram one of the most favored of mortals; but Mordecai sat at the king's gate, and the soul of Haman was troubled.

It was the old, story—older than the days of the Montagues and Capulets—almost as old as the days of Adam and Eve. There has been first ambitions and rivalries, the harsh words and bitter recriminations. hatreds and revenges. Now all had settled down into a deep and silent enmity. Hiram Gardner and Thomas Remington lived upon adjourning farms; could have clasped hands across the narrow aisles as they sat in their pews on Sunday; met each other daily in streets, at the post-office, in the market-place. But they never spoke, never recognized each other by glance or sign. Yet they were both good men—men who should have loved each other. Perhaps deep down in either heart their was a regret for the past, a longing for reconciliation. Perhaps if either one had been unfortunate or in distress, the other might have been willing to be the first to bury the hatchet and smoke the calumet of peace. But both were prosperous, both were honored; and the demon of pride kept them apart, ruling their natures as with a rod of iron.

Yet a faint line across the meadows showed where a well-worn foot-path had once run from door-way to door-way.

I think that my coming to Highland was a pleasure to Hope. Perhaps it brought some element into her quiet life that was needed there. But after the first excitement of my arrival had had died away, and I had insensibly glided from the position of guest into that of member of the family, I began to perceive that all was not well with her. There was at the times a look of pain and longing in her eyes. There was drooping curves about her sweet lips even when she smiled. There was a nervous unrest about her, and she flew from employment to employment as if to escape thought. I noticed that when these moods were upon her mother watched her futively, and her father's brow darkened strangely. Yet his manner toward her was inexpressibly tender. She was, indeed, the very apple of his eye—this 'Hope' that had been born to him after all his other children had been laid under the sod.

'I shall not go to church to-day,' said Cousin Rhoda, one Sunday morning. 'Melissa's mother is not well, and I have told her she may go home.'

'Neither shall I go,' Cousin Hiram. 'I sprained my wrist yesterday, and it growing very painful.'

'Let us walk, then, Cousin Winifred,' said Hope, her eyes brightening. 'We can go 'across lots, and it shortens the distance by half.'

Nothing could have suited me better, and we we were soon on our way. No flower that blossomed in the meadow or down by the winding river banks was fairer or sweeter than Hope Gardner that day. All the freshness, the purity, the sweetness, the repose of that still Sabbath morning seemed embodied in her.

The minister was reading the first hymn, when a firm, quick tread sounded up the aisle. Even before I had time to think I felt a sudden shiver in the arm that lay against mine, and saw the hand that held one-half of the hymnbook tremble. A remarkably fine-looking young man passed by and took a seat in the pew just in front of us, on the other side of the aisle. It was Mr. Remington's pew.

Impelled by I know not what subtile instinct of womanly sympathy, I glanced at Hope from behind my veil, expecting to see precisely what I did see—evidences of sudden and profound emotion A quick pallor drove all the color from her face for an instant; then the rich blood swept back again, and her cheeks grew crimson.

She scarcely glanced at the newcomer, but kept her eyes fixed upon old Dr. Merrill, apparently absorbed in his thirdlys and forthlys. As soon as the benediction was pronounced, however, she took my arm hastily and pressed forwad toward the door.

If she was anxious to escape from any one, to elude any one, her design was defeated. There was a crowd near the door, and our progress was obstructed. As we waited in the porch I felt a presence behind us, and a low voice that could scarcely have reached less sensitive ears whispered.

'Look at me, Hope! Speak to me! Give me one word, for God's sake!'

She clung to my arm with a close clasp, trembling like a leaf. For one instant her face grew radiant as she lifted her eyes to meet the passionate glances that sought her own so eargerly.

But she spoke no word. He leaned forward, with another whisper upon his lips. Suddenly she turned with an air of decision.

'Cousion Winifred—Miss Ethridge—this is Mr. Willard Remington.'

I bowed; the gentleman bowed. Then the crowd broke and parted at the steps, and we all went our several ways.

Hope went silently half the way home, and I walked, statue-like, beside her. At last I could bear it no longer.

'What is it, Hope?' I asked. 'Tell me all about it dear.'

'Oh, there is nothing to tell!' she said, wearily. 'Only I am very wretched and so is—somebody else.'

Of course. It was merely another old story. Romeo and Juliet this time. It was not necessary to ask the cause of the trouble. I knew it too well already.

'Is this Mr. Thomas Remington's son?' I asked, to make assurance doubly sure.

'Yes' And after a little she told me all there was to tell: how they had loved each other for years in boy and girl fashion long before this dreadful feud arose; how, as boy and girl, they had given each other up on account of family troubles: how Willard went West to seek his fortune as lawyer; how both imagined that they had forgotten the early love, and that the old wounds were healed; how he had come home a year ago; and how the first word, the first look, exchanged between them that instead of dying it had been gaining strength through all these silent years. But it was of no use, she said: they could never marry And now Willard had come on again, when it was only torture to both of them to meet, and she did not know how she could bear it.

After that, day by day I watched the struggle that was going on in Hope Gardner's heart—a struggle under which she grew pale and still and cold. I knew that lovers met some times in the little summer-house at the foot of the garden, or down by the river-side. So persistent a wooer as this new Romeo could hardly fail to bring about as much as that. Yet stolen interviews brought little of joy to either of them, if one could judge of the weary eyes and set, still face that Hope always brought back with her.

One night I waylaid Cousin Hiram as he was coming in from the orchard. He looked worn and depressed. Indeed, a shadow rested upon the whole house.

'Were you coming in?' I asked. 'I was just going up to the 'Spreading Tree' to see if the harvest apples were ripe.'

'Not yet, I guess,' he said, turning about. 'But I'll go with you. Apples are late this year,' he added, reflectively.

The large tree, renowned for its wide-spreading branches, was laden with fruit even to the topmost bough—great balls of green and gold, that were slowly reddening in the sunshine.

'Hard a Rock Dunder,' said my companion, making a slight indentation upon one of them with his thumb. 'They will not be fully ripe in a fortnight.'

I had not lured him there, out sight of the house, to talk about apples.

'Cousin Hiram,' said I, suddenly, while my heart seemed to spring to my throat—'Cousin Hiram, do you know that Hope loves Willard Remington?'

I was frightened before the words had fairly passed my lips. I broached, I well knew, a tabooed subject. People were not in the habit of talking to Hiram Garden about the Remingtons. I ventured one glance at his face. It was stern and dark, and his breath came in quick, labored gasps. Presently he turned on his heel, and was about to leave me. But, having put my hand to the plow, it was not my nature to look back. I ran after him, and repeated my question.

Pshaw!' he said, tossing an apple into the air with the toe of his boot, 'that's all over long ago. There was some nonsense or other between them when they were mere children, I believe.

'You believe! Do you not know, Cousin Hiram, that Hope loves him to-day?'

'Well, what is to be done about it? What if she does?' he asked, turning udon me like a lion at bay. 'Do you suppose I can ever humble myself enough to give my daughter to that man's son? I'd see her die first! But there's no danger; girls don't die of broken hearts, except in novels,'

'Do not be too confident, Cousin Hiram,' I said 'Can you not see that she is dying? I do not say that you will be compelled to lay her under the sod this year or next. Something will be left probab'y, that will move about your house in a pale, still way; something that will work, and speak something with sad, weary eyes, and an air of hopeless patience. But Hope, your bright, joyless loving child, your song-bird, will will be dead—dead as her sister in the grave-yard yonder!'

He shivered from head to foot that soft, balmy summer night, and his mouth worked in a sudden spasm of pain. But I went on pitilessly:

'It is killing her mother too: can you not see it?' Can you not see how her eyes follow Hope, how she grieves over her, how her own cheeks pale whenever Hope's grows white, how—'

'Stop!' he cried. 'Do you think I am blind, Winifred, or a fool? Do you think I have no eyes? Do you think I am in this position from mere willfulness? But women never can look at things from a man's stand-point. How can I help myself? I don't want to mar Hope's life, I don't want to make her wretched; yet what can be done? I can't undo the work of the last seven years, and I can't let Hope marry the son of the only man on earth, I verily believe, who hates me—and whom I hate. That's the long and short of it, Winifred. We're in a bad fix, but can't be helped.'

'But you don't hate Willard?'

'No—I like him. He's a fine, manly young fellow; sure to make his mark in the world, if he is a Remington I have not fault to find with him.'

'Then' oh, Cousin Hiram—'I began. But hed interrupted me, laying a heavy hand upon my arm.

'There's no use in talking, Winifred. You can tell me nothing that I do not know already. I am sorry for all this as you can be. Is not Hope my own child? But I am a man, and I can not go back on my record. I never shall consent to this marriage, unless some voice speaks to me out of a thunder-cloud and says 'Do it.'

A sudden thought struck me as I glanced up at the laden boughs of the apple-tree.

'Then if a miracle were wrought in their favor, your pride might be persuaded to yield?' I said, doubtless with a little tinge of bitterness.

He answered, angrily:

'When a sign is sent to me direct from Heaven, I'll give Hope to Willard Remington: but not before.'

I sat up late that night; but early next morning, when the gray dawn was just brightening in the east, I stole softely past Hope's door, down the stairs, they creaked perversely despite all my caution, opened the hall door as silently as a dream, and flew down the garden path and over the wall into the orchard.

For some days things went on from bad to worse. One evening Hope threw a light cloud over her head, and wondered off towards a little clump of hemlocks down by the falls. I knew well enough where she was going, and what she was going for. Probably her father knew also. But if so, he did not interfere. He could trust her.

I was in the hall when she came in. Her face was as white as marble, and just as set and cold. Her eyes were tearless, but heavy and blood-shot. She went up stairs to her room, and I went to mine. She had never spoken to me of Willard Remington since that Sunday at church, and I respected her silence.

The next day, at the post-office, I heard that he had gone back to his Western life.

This was Tuesday. The next Tuesday we were all out on the porch when a neighbor, who was going by, stopped for a chat, leaning with both arms upon the gate.

'By-the-bye,' he said, 'have you heard of the accident on the New York Central? Cars ran off a bridge into fifteen feet of water, and a third of the passengers were killed. Willard Remington was on board, and they say he is among the missing.'

Hope raised one had to her head, with a faint scream, and fell to the floor as if a ball had pierced her heart.

We carried her into house and laid her upon the bed in her mother's room. It was an hour before she gave signs of returning consciousness. Then, when the pale lips began to quiver a little, and there was a sight tremulous motion of the eyelids, Cousin Rhoda said, in a hushing voice:

'Go away now, both of you. When she comes to she will want to see no face but her mother's. Hiram Gardner, if your pride has killed our child may God forgive you!'

We went out of the back-door, and followed the litte foot-path that led to the orchard, still we stood under the the trees where the harvest apples were fast crimsoning. Cousin Hiram's face was very grave.

'Winifred,' he said, 'I wonder if the sign from Heaven was sent to me long ago, and my blind eyes could not see it? This is too much like the voice out of the the thunder-cloud.'

I passed around to the other side of the tree, apparently looking for fallen fruit, and waited for him to follow me, which he did presently.

'Look there, Cousin Hiram!' I said tremblingly, while my face flushed. 'Look there!'

'Look where?' he asked. 'I do not see any thing.'

I took a stick from the ground and pointed to a great crimson apple that swung from the nearest bough, yet far above our heads. There, in letters of pale green upon a ruby ground, were the words, 'Willard'—'Hope.'

He stared violently. 'My God! Winifred, what does that mean?' And the man's lips were white as ashes.

'It means,' I answered, perhaps with lips as collorless as his, for the very depths of my being were stirred—'it means that if Willard is a live he belongs to Hope, and you have no right to keep them apart.'

From full five minutes he stood beside me with his face burried in his hands. Then he looked up, with a faint smile playing about his resolute lips.

'There is some hocus-pocus about this, Winifred. We don't have miracles in the nineteenth century. However, I accept the omen. I am going over to Mr. Remington's to ask if Willard was on the train, or if he has been heard from. Don't touch that apple.'

An hour afterward Cousin Hiram came home, and walked straight through the siting-room into the bedroom where Hope still lay with closed eyes, speechless, motionless—a white statue that scarcely breathed. He bent down and kissed her lips.

'I have been over to Mr. Remington's, Hope,' he said. 'Willard has just telegraphed. He was not on the train. Open your eyes, my child, and look at me. I want you to send this apple to Willard, and tell him it means that you belong to him, and he to you.'

She just kissed him; that was all.

Three years afterward I went up to Highland to meet Hope, who was home on a visit. We were all under the spreading apple-tree.

'Now tell us all about it, Winifred,' said Cousin Hiram. 'I know you can explan the mystery of the apples if you choose.'

'No,' I answered, laughing; 'that would spoil all the romance. But if you ever want a miracle performed in behalf of your little granddaughter here, all you have to do is to give me a sharp pair of scissors, some tissue-paper, and a few drops of mucilage.'

'One thing more, I reckon,' added Cousin Hiram. 'In my opinion you would need a half-ripe harvest apple.'

Report of the Survey of the Defiance Line of B. & O. Extension.

PITTSBURG, PA., Oct. 19, 1871.

Wm. C. Holgate, Esq., Chairman Railway Committee of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois:

DEAR SIR:—With this you will receive a map and profile of the line which has been surveyed in the interests you represent, for the extension of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, known as the Defiance Line. Starting from Tiffin, in Ohio, it runs westward in a nearly direct line past Defiance, Auburn, Albion, Bremen, etc., to Lake Station, on the Michigan Central Railroad, near the southern extremity of Lake Michigan, whence it may be extended to any point in Chicago or vicinity that may hereafter be selected. Its general position is upon the plateau dividing the waters flowing westward into Lakes, and southward into the Mississippi, which is intersected by some topographical features of a decided and interesting character with reference to the location of railways. In the middle of the State of Indiana we cross a glacial deposit, given the county a somewhat rugged character, while increases further north. The valleys, cut by these ice mountains of a former age, are now occupied by the Maumee and Wabash rivers on the east, and the St. Joseph and Kankakee on the west, with an intermediate country studded with small lakes and gravel hills. But the lakes are not all visible, some of the have become mossed over with the vegetation of ages, and sustain a growth of shrubs and the lighter forest trees, and some have their moss coverings cleared and converted into meadow lands. It does not, however, follow that all the marsh lands that are covered with moss or peat have a sub-stratum of water, generally the foundations are reliable for sustaining railways, and probably it will be found universally true that where the original forest was hard wood, the bottom will also be found under the lighter burdens of timber. In making the preliminary surveys care has been taken to avoid what seemed to be treacherous ground, but the use of the sounding bar will be necessary in the final location.

Starting at Tiffin with a more detailed description of the line, it is believed it will be best to occupy a position to the north of town, and cross the Sandusky river about a mile below the present railway bridge, and from that point running directly to the town of Fostoria. Thence to Defiance the country is flat, slightly rolling between the heads of the Portage river, and gradually falling towards the Maumee. It is a dense forest of hard wood, skirted on the south by cultivated ridges, and very fertile. The line of surveys was at the north base of these ridges, but the line projected upon the map is through the forest. It is believed an intermediate line will best serve the wants of the country and the interests of the railroad company. At Defiance two lines have been surveyed, the one on the north and the other on the south side of the town, both are good, and the selection between them may be governed by land damages. The former crosses the Maumee river two miles below the mouth of the Auglaize, the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railway opposite the town, and Tiffin river one mile above its mouth, and thence follows the direction of the Hicksville road until it passes Lost Creek Marsh. The latter crosses the Auglaize river one-half mile above its mouth, the Wabash Canal below the lock at Phelp's Mill, and the Maumee river at Delaware Bend, connecting with the former lines east of Lost Creek Marsh.

It will be observed that both lines avoid Lost Creek Marsh, which is an expanse of flat country overflowed with a foot or two of water at certain seasons of the year, covered for the most part with hard wood timber, but with a solid gravel bottom, and unobjectionable, so far as that is concerned, for railroad purpose, but its occupancy would involve an increase of cost, and from our position to the south of it we obtain a more favorable crossing of the ridge dividing its waters from those of the St. Joseph river of the Maumee. After passing the marsh we diverge to to north, and cross the St. Josephs at Orange, one mile south of the village of Vienna, near the eastern boundary of the State of Indiana; from this point we run directly to Auburn, the capital of DeKalb county, and with same divergence to avoid the gravel hills, to Albion, the capital of Noble county; we are here among the head-waters of the Elkhart, an important tributary to the Great St. Joseph river. Turkey Lake, in Kosciusko county, is directly upon our line, but we pass it on favorable terms at the neck dividing the upper and lower lakes, and thence reach the flourishing town of Bremen, in the county of Marshall, passing north of the capital of that county, and of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad nine miles. The Kankakee river is crossed below Mud Lake and three and one-half miles south of the town of North Liberty. We here encounter about six miles of marsh land, which consists of a gravel bottom overlaid with from three to four feet of soft peat, and therefore within the easy range of railway construction. From the Kankakee we reach a point one mile north of the town of Westville, in the county of La Porte three miles to the north, and passing over that beautiful and fertile region known as Door Prairie. The descent from Westville to the Grand Prairie, upon which stands the city of Chicago, must be located with care. By occupying a position to the north of the village a longer descending grade may be obtained to the crossing of Coffee Creek; we have effected the descent with twenty-five feet per mile, other claim to have done it with less, and there is no doubt but a favorable line can be obtained. Thus we reach that wide expanse of level and highly cultivated country, over which railroads may be carried in any direction, and upon which so many have already taken their position, both from the east and from the west, to pass the southern extremity of Lake Michigan.

The distance from Tiffin to Lake Station is 212¼ miles, and it intersects ten north and south railroads, the most important of which is the Toledo, Wabash & Western, on acount of its westward extensions and its large freight business.

The river crossed are the Sandusky, Maumee, Tiffin, St. Josephs of the Maumee and the Kankakee, and the aggregate extent of bridging required by them is 1,600 feet, all other streams crossed are of minor importance.

The maximum grade is 25 feet per mile, and the minimum radius of curvature is 5,730 feet with an aggregate curvature of 123¼ degrees, and the sum of the ascents and descents is 1,721 feet. Small as these aggregates are, they are capable of reduction; the curvature is entirely insignificant, but a more close examination of the ground may indicate the propriety of a reduction in grades.

Of the county passed over, 47 per cent. is cultivated land, 49 per cent. timber land and 4 per cent. marsh: and the towns upon the line or in proximity to it are:—

Tiffin,	with a	population of	6,000
Fostoria,	"	"	2,000
Belmore	"	"	150
Defiance	"	"	3,000

North Liberty		"	300
Kingsbury,	"	"	100
Westville,	"	"	900

These towns are growing rapidly as the country becomes more thickly settled and the manufactories increase. The hard wood forests, which constitute the primitive characteristic of this region, caused the early pioneers to pass it by for the inviting and open prairies to the west; but what was then the objection is now that attraction to settlers. The timber has become largely valuable and machinery is being erected at all suitable points for converting it into shapes for ultimate use, and it will be found that the forests will furnish more railway freight during the process of clearing the agricultural products that will be gathered from their ultimate cultivation.

The following table of heights, which are given above a base line 100 feet below the water in the Maumee river at Defiance, will sufficiently indicate the undulations of the country:—

The estimate cost of constructing the road is as follows, viz:

Grading and minor bridging on 212¼ miles, @ $5,000 per mile	$1,061,250
1,600 feet major bridging @ $50 per foot	80,000
212¼ miles of rail track @ $10,000 a mile	2,122,500
Land damages @ $2,000 per mile	424,500
Contingencies and engineers 10 per cent.	368,825
Total	$4,057,075

I have thus described a railroad line, and the country travesed by it, of remarkably favorable features, in directness, grades, curvatures and cost. It will also be a line that will command an almost unlimited amount of traffic. The existing east and west lines from Chicago are crowded with business to the extent of their present means of transportation, a business that is increasing in such a rapid ratio that the increase alone will furnish a new outlet with all that it wants to do by the time it can be opened for traffic. It is the best line that can be obtained from Chicago eastward to the Central Ohio both for passengers and freight, either on their way to Baltimore, Philadelphia or New York.

If you ask me why this line, which is superior to all others, has been allowed to remain so long unimproved, I point you to primitive forests of hard wood with which the country was originally covered, and their influence in driving settlers to the more easily subdued regions to the south and the west, to the disposition and necessity there has been for railroad companies to gather aid and influence by conducting their lines through the towns and settlements upon less favorable routes for through traffic, causes, however, which no longer exist.

Very truly yours,
